The mission secretary had the rare privilege of attending Sunday School at our Greensboro First Church and worshiping with the congregation there last Sunday. We found a most active and wide-awake Sunday School, with Bro. O. P. Shelton as superintendent. The Sunday School voted unanimously to give one offering a month to missions, and took their first offering for this purpose Sunday, resulting in a total offering of $55. The school voted to give the offering the second Sunday in every month to missions. It is already giving one offering a month to the Orphanage. This is now one of our very progressive and growing Sunday Schools, the attendance being on the increase from Sunday to Sunday. It was good indeed to be in such a Sunday School and meet such a devoted superintendent, such enthusiastic and capable officers and teachers and such eager and deeply interested pupils. Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Rowland are much beloved for their good works, and Dr. Rowland is greeted with large and growing congregations, and all with whom we talked were in high praise of the good work of his wife in behalf of missions and other interests of the Church. The Church has recently completed an adequate and ample parsonage with which pastor and people are mutually delighted. The Church is debating a new and much-enlarged and improved house of worship, and the prospects and enthusiasm for this achievement are exceedingly hopeful. It does not take a prophet to see that if all things continue to go as well as they are going at present it will not be long until Greensboro First Church will be launched into a building program that will adequately house and care for their growing Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and Church congregation.

THE HENDERSON CHURCH.

October 5th was a great and happy day for the members and friends of the Henderson Christian Church. On that day, fifty men, women and young people united with the Church. Some came to us by letter; others on profession of faith. The pastor and members feel as if great things can be accomplished for our Lord and Master with this additional working force, and we pray our Church may be a united body of working Christians.

With our well-beloved pastor, Rev. A. H. Hook, and his splendid wife to aid and help us in so many ways, the Church is going forward in every organization. The Sunday School, with Mr. C. D. Newman as superintendent, now reports an average attendance of 120. The school has recently been regraded, and all our classes, with the exception of the two older ones, are benefiting by the graded lessons. We are using the lessons recommended by the Pilgrim Press, and find them most satisfactory.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society, meeting Sunday afternoons, is well attended. An assistant superintendent, Miss Lizzie Belle Newman, was recently appointed, who comes to us full of enthusiasm and new ideas gained at the Elon Chautauqua.

The Young People's Christian Endeavor is also doing splendid work. The room is packed to the door on Sunday evenings, and the allotted time is always well taken up by these young people.

Our ladies' aid is still a hustling organization, as it has always been. It is now undertaking to raise money to recarpet the Church. The first step in this direction was a booth at the Golden Belt Fair last week, at which over $90 was cleared through serving lunches. We also have started a "penny-a-day list," and have enough names pledged to amount to almost $100.

The Ladies' Missionary Society has taken on new life. We have started a mission study class, using the new book on China. At our last meeting, we adopted the standard of excellence, and will work during the year to meet the required points.

We have another lively meeting in the Church, and that is the prayer meeting. The Wednesday evening prayer meetings now have about seventy-five in attendance, and through these meetings of prayer and praise we trust many may find the Christ.

WANTS ASSISTANT PASTOR.

It is believed that the brotherhood will appreciate some information regarding the First Church of Portsmouth. Since the resignation of Rev. W. L. Wells, the First Christian Church of Portsmouth, Rev. H. W. Dowding, D. D., a resident of this city and a former pastor of the Church during the World War, has been elected to fill the vacancy indefinitely as temporary pastor.

With Dr. Dowding as pastor and preacher, the membership is considering the proposal of employing an assistant to the pastor who will assume the personal visitation of the Church and develop the Sunday School and Young People's Societies. If the right person can be found and agreed upon within the financial ability of the Church, it is believed that the combination will be a fine one, and it will result in a livelier interest and greater happiness in the Church life.

Dr. Dowding is a great preacher, and if his physical limitations (which make extensive pastoral activities almost impossible) can be supplemented by a young, active Christian worker, great things may be accomplished.

CONFERENCES MEET.

Eastern Virginia Conference meets Tuesday before first Sunday in November (October 28), 1924, at Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., at 11 A. M., W. L. Cooper, secretary of Church, 600 W. 28th St., Norfolk, Va.

Western North Carolina Conference meets on Wednesday after first Sunday in November (November 5th), 1924, with the Randleman Christian Church, Chas. F. Swaney, secretary of Church, Randleman, N. C.

North Carolina and Virginia Conference meets Tuesday after second Sunday in November (November 11th), 1924, at Apple's Chapel; D. E. Michael, secretary of Church, McLeansville, N. C.

Eastern North Carolina Conference meets Tuesday after third Sunday in November (November 18th), 1924, at Pleasant Union Christian Church, Harnett County; W. S. Long, secretary of Church, Lillington, N. C., Route 1.

N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Raleigh Christian Church has invited the North Carolina Christian Conference to meet with them at its next annual session, and the invitation has been accepted.

Conference will open Monday, November 24th at 8 P. M. The program is in process of preparation and will be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. All committees and speakers are urged to have their work in proper shape when it appears on the program.

The outstanding obligations of the Conference may be met at this session if each Church will do its full duty in raising the home mission apportionments. We are anxious to meet all these obligations at this session.

Every Church is urged to send in a full report, either by a person delegated or through the mail, by the opening session of Conference, so that the several committees may be able to do their work when they appear on the program.

Fraternally yours,

W. C. WICKER,
President.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

TRANSACTIONS OF OUR GENERAL BOARD.

The General Board of our Church met in Dayton, Ohio, last week and laid plans for the next year. Not much of a different character was undertaken, though it is believed that the general work is in good condition, and that our boards, in their several spheres of responsibility, face the future hopefully. In this day, when the denominational consciousness seems to be growing keener in most of the divisions of Protestantism, there is greater need than ever of a Church like our own, founded on charity and liberty, and the historic advocate of union.

It is significant in this connection that the Congregational and United Brethren Churches are willing to discuss with us the bases of union. The Congregationalists, so it is alleged, would bring a sort of prestige due to their numbers and historic associations to this union, while we would add that moral and spiritual fervor which has always characterized the Christians in their effort to follow their Lord. The United Brethren have bishops without autocratic powers. They are a marvelously efficient body, and are free from extremes in theology. It will be a pity not to give earnest and prayerful heed to these opportunities to exemplify our willingness to answer in our organic life the prayer of our Master for the oneness of His followers.

Rev. and Mrs. Llewellyn C. Fletcher were placed under appointment for the Japan field. They will sail in August. Three or four others offered themselves for the foreign field, but we had no funds to send them. Here is occasion for prayer and heart-searching.

Union Christian College is closed, and not likely to open its doors again at Merom. Already four young ministers in preparation there last year have gone to other denominations. The General Board ordered its special committee to secure an enabling act of the Indiana Legislature to dispose of the property, with view to perpetuating this oldest of our colleges elsewhere. This is certain: our Church cannot prosper without strong colleges. It costs money to maintain them, but it costs more not to have them at all. Here again we have cause for prayer and heart-searching inquiry.

Misses Helen R. Stearns and Lucy M. Eldredge are to write group graded lessons in the primary and junior ages, respectively. The Christian Publishing Association will print six lessons for each age for testing out in our schools, with a view later of publishing a complete series. The Uniform Lessons are destined gradually to disappear from our schools. The group graded lessons are destined, in the minds of leaders in Christian education, to occupy the field for the next generation. In view of these facts, our Boards of Publishing and Christian Education are preparing for our future needs in statesmanlike manner.

The forward movement officially terminates on January 1, 1925. This movement has brought to the general work in cash more than $450,000, with pledges outstanding of about $400,000. The General Board voted to perpetuate this movement in a bureau of Christian stewardship and promotion, which will collect unpaid pledges, secure renewals and new ones, though without a general campaign, and educate our people generally in adopting the budget for their local benevolences and using such modern methods of Church finance as the every-member canvass and the envelope system of payment.

The new Christian Publishing Association building is going forward nicely. It is expected that it will be ready for dedication in April, 1925. This new home for our publishing interests and our general offices will serve our Church most worthily for many years to come.

A special committee prepared a tentative budget with a plan of allotment to the various Conferences and with what appeared to be decidedly improved methods of systematic collection for our general benevolent enterprises. This plan is to be transmitted in writing to every member of the General Board and will be finally passed on after a year's careful study.

The Church in the South will be particularly interested in the approaching offering for the Board of Christian Education on November 2d. This board has spent more than $5,000 in scholarships and field service in our Convention the past year. Our Southern Board of Religious Education is authorized by our Southern Christian Convention to take a special offering for the support of this General Board of Christian Education on November 2d. THE CHRISTIAN SUN hopes our Southern people will respond cheerfully and liberally to Dr. Walters' appeal on this behalf.

Looked at in the large, we can confidently assure our people that the Church is not only holding her own, but that she is going forward. Especially is this true when we consider the splendid gains we have attained through the efforts of the Board of Evangelism. Twelve thousand new members is their goal next year. Three thousand of this number should come to our Southern Churches. We should work and pray that this increase may be given us by our Master and that we may wisely integrate them into the program of the Church and kingdom.

For these evidences of growth and achievement we give thanks to God and take courage for future conquest for Him. God bless the Christian Church and her leaders in their efforts to serve our Lord and Master.

"FATHER AND SON WEEK."

"Father and Son Week" is November 9-16. Every Church should celebrate it. Three pieces of helpful literature have been especially prepared for the occasion by Wayne G. Miller, Clarence N. Wright, and P. R. Hayward, and each school should order its supplies at once from the International Council of Religious Education, 5 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The material that has been prepared is as follows:

(1) A four-page leaflet, giving general plans and suggestions for observing the occasion. All who promote or plan for the observance should have this. Price 1 cent each, or $1.00 per 100, in any quantity, postpaid.

(2) A program of worship for Sunday School or Church service. This is so priced that all who attend the service can be supplied. Price, ½-cent, or 50 cents per 100, in any quantity, postpaid.

(3) A leaflet of attractive and usable "Father and Son Songs" for use at the banquet. Each "banqueteer" can be supplied. Price, ½-cent each, or 50 cents per 100, in any quantity, postpaid.

MEMORIAL COMMITTEE MEETS.

The committee on memorials of Old Lebanon Church and of Rev. James O'Kelly, Judge J. F. West, chairman, met at Suffolk, Friday night, October 10th, and decided on the general outline and character of memorials to be established. It was voted to place on the Old Lebanon Church site a marble marker some six feet high above a cement surface, about three feet broad and fifteen inches thick, tapering at the top with open Bible carved upon it. Beneath this is to be placed a bronze tablet with suitable wording to be prepared by Dr. W. W. Staley. There is to be placed a cement walk on the highway to the ten-foot square cement surface, in the center of which the marker is to be erected. From this square, 10 feet in each direction, there is to be a lawn inside of a plot reserved which is to be marked by corner-posts of stone.

As to the O'Kelly Memorial, the committee voted to place a bust or figure of stone which in some way is to represent religious liberty. This bust or figure is to be placed in the rotunda of Alamance Building at Elon College, or in the central court formed by the present building program, as a sub-committee now appointed and the committee may decide at a meeting to be held in Norfolk on October 29th. It is estimated that these memorials combined will cost not less than $2,000, but estimates are now being secured, which estimates are to be laid before the committee at its adjourned meeting. The committee is still open for suggestions from SUN readers and those interested. As soon as the estimated cost is in hand and the character of the memorials is definitely decided upon, the same will be given to SUN readers and further appeals for funds with which to complete the work. The committee feels that the people will respond when they know exactly what is to be done and what it will cost to do it.

NOTICE.

The North Carolina Woman's Missionary Convention will meet on Friday, October 31st, at Reidsville Christian Church. The morning session will open at 10 o'clock. All delegates and visitors going to this meeting and expecting to spend Thursday night in Reidsville should notify Mrs. B. F. Fields, 408 West Market Street, and she will see that homes are provided.

DEDICATION OF DOVER CHURCH.

Sunday, October 5th, will be long remembered in Dover, Del. It was the day of dedication of the greatly enlarged and amply equipped house of worship of the People's Christian Church. Something over $150,000 has been spent in making the Church one of the most up-to-date and complete Church plants to be found anywhere. It is really built with the view of being the community center, and if the present plans are carried out, there seems to be no good reason why it should not be so.

The main entrance to the Church auditorium and community building is through the doors opening into the new memorial tower which stands eighty feet high. In addition to this entrance, there is an entrance on the south and two entrances on the north. From the Church auditorium, there are two entrances into the community building. The floor of the tower, also the base and door trimmings, are of beautiful black and white marble. In the tower also is installed a set of Deagan tubular chimes. The walls of the auditorium are ivory, tinted with artistic moldings and an arched plaster ceiling, together with twelve beautiful memorial windows, representing noted scriptural characters. All the woodwork is in ivory shade. The pews and screens are colored in oak. The lighting fixtures are unique and combine the candle and indirect combination. In the main auditorium there are two wide side aisles, a long row of seats in the center, and a shorter row of seats along each side. The effect of this is striking, in that the preacher does not have to look from the pulpit upon a wide center aisle, but faces the audience directly in front of the pulpit. The seating capacity, including the gallery, will accommodate more than 700 people. By bringing in chairs and making use of the wide corridor at the side, and the foyer in the rear, nearly 1,000 people can be comfortably seated within hearing distance of the speaker.

Immediately confronting the pulpit is a specially designed circular Communion rail and chancel, which contain appropriate Communion table. Back of pulpit is a large rostrum and pipe organ enclosure, and festooned curtains back of the triple pulpit chair. To the right of the pulpit is the organ console and the choir loft. To the left is a beautiful baptismal font, and a large silk American flag on brass standard, whose combined effect makes a most impressive place of worship. Under the main auditorium, which may be reached by double-door entrance from the community building, is a large dining-room 90 feet by 45 feet. This room is furnished with thirty-two round tables in mahogany finish, with cane-bottom chairs to match.

Grouped about the main auditorium, in the rear and to the side, are the various departments which make up the community building. The main floor of this building has a wide corridor which makes it possible to enter each department without passing through other rooms. To the right of the main entrance of the community building is a Church parlor, furnished in upholstered, frosted wicker furniture. Besides this is the nursery, or cradle roll department, furnished with sleeping-cradles, mattresses, etc., and with toys to amuse the kiddies. The large cloak-room for the women communicates from the main corridor to the ladies' lavatory. Next following this in order is the beginners' room, 26 feet by 12 feet, trimmed in a soft shade of blue. Here the Sunday School children from four to five years of age meet for worship and study.

The primary department follows next, with an assembly room 15 feet by 32 feet, with separate class rooms opening into it. This department is equipped with piano, blackboards, maps, charts, etc. Here the Sunday School children from six to eight meet for worship and study. These are all on one side of the chapel of the community building, which chapel is a well-lighted room 29 feet by 32 feet, furnished with opera chairs.

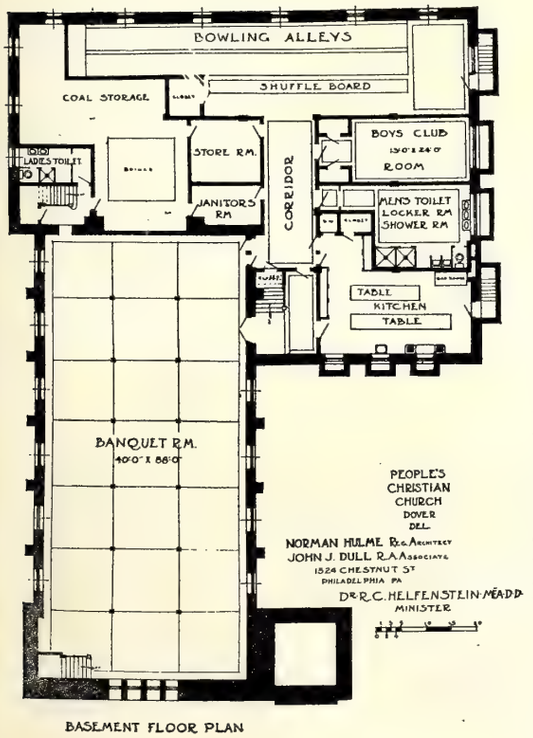
This room is to be used for prayer meetings, lectures, large committee meetings, etc. It is also the home of the young people's division of the Sunday School as an assembly room, and used by a Bible class for recitation purposes. This chapel is also equipped with piano, blackboards, speakers' platform, etc. The junior department is in the opposite building from the primary department. It is of the same plan and is also equipped with piano, blackboard, maps, charts, etc. Here the Sunday School children from nine to eleven will meet for worship and study.

On the second floor of the community building is the reception room, 21 feet by 36 feet. This room has a mantle fireplace, made of rug tapestry brick and has candle lighting fixtures on the side walls. The community hall and gymnasium is next to the reception room on the second floor, and is 50 feet by 40 feet, with ceiling 18 feet high and a gallery on two sides. The gallery has a motion-picture booth. The rest of the gallery space is to be used for Sunday School classes. The community hall has a large stage for pageants and entertainments by local talent. It is equipped with colored footlight, a pair of beautiful velour curtains, and has interior and exterior sceneries. This hall, together with the adjoining class rooms which communicate by folding doors, will seat 600 people, and with the aid of gallery, even larger numbers. The gymnasium is equipped with proper apparatus, such as is found for proper exercise and athletic contests. The gymnasium is to be used also as an assembly room for the adult department of the Sunday School, and for community meetings. There are other rooms also on the second floor to be used for Sunday School purposes.

The architect who designed the building declares it one of the best plans for modern departmental Sunday School and social service work, and other competent authorities agree with him. This Church was very fortunate in finding a real benefactor in the person of Mr. Eldridge R. Johnson, a former citizen of Dover, but now residing at Camden. He has constantly challenged the loyalty and devotion of Dover Church by giving them, from time to time, sums of money which total more than half of the entire cost of the building, and in addition donated the chimes and very striking memorial tablet at the entrance to the tower.

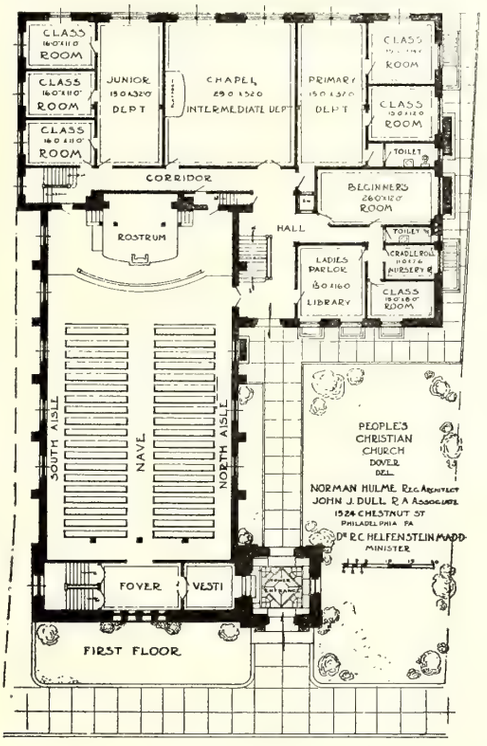


BASEMENT FLOOR PLAN

The dedication day opened under favorable conditions at 10:30 A. M., with the auditorium and gallery filled with happy and expectant worshipers.

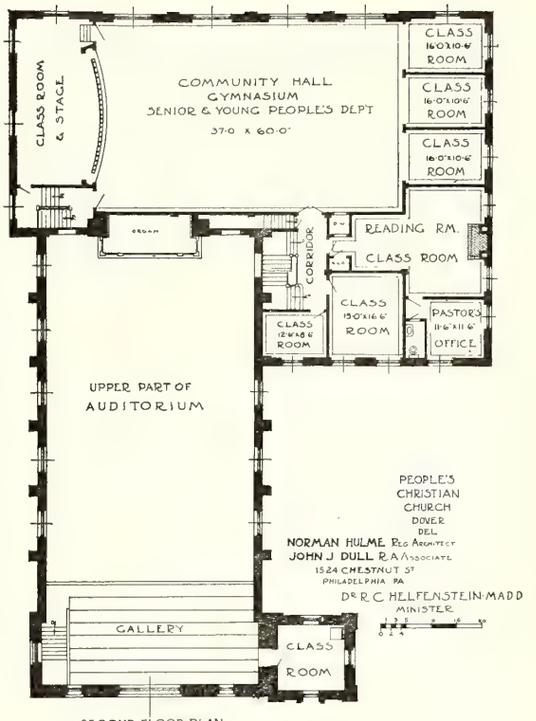
Rev. Warren H. Denison, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio, preached the dedication sermon at 11 A. M., using as his theme "The Glory of a Temple of Worship." Dr. Denison spoke with much feeling and appropriateness of the real glory that comes to a temple worship in which the spiritual life is sought after, maintained and developed. The various musical numbers were all inspiring indeed, and the great pipe organ lent its dignity and solemnity to the occasion.

The service of dedication was one of the most elaborate and beautiful the writer has ever witnessed. But for its length, we would love to reproduce the entire service. The pastor, Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., with all the people standing, read the objects, the causes and the purposes for which and to which the building was dedicated, the people responding at the end of each clause with the refrain "We dedicate this house." The last item on the program of dedication was read by pastor and people in concert.



The prayer of dedication, one of the most spiritual and uplifting utterances of the day, was by the father of the pastor, Dr. D. M. Helfenstein. The afternoon service began at 3 o'clock, with appropriate selections and hymns, and a sermon was given by one of THE SUN's editors, J. O. Atkinson. At the conclusion of this service, the entire audience repaired to the street in front of the Church, where the unveiling ceremonies took place, at which Mr. Hermon Eldredge delivered a most fitting and appropriate address.

The Sunday evening service, beginning at 7:45, was preceded by an organ recital, beginning at 7:15, with Mrs. J. Henry Hazel presiding at the organ. The largest audience of the day gathered for the evening service, and Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor Christian Temple, Norfolk, delivered a masterful sermon, which was indeed a fitting climax to a great and wonderful day. Dr. Smith used as his subject, "The Joy of Worship," and with vigorous thought and zealous spirit he revealed to his congregation the joy which had come to them through worship, and would come to them when engaged in true worship.



SECOND FLOOR PLAN

Following the dedication service on Sunday, a great program for the entire week, beginning at 7:30 P. M. each day, was carried out by notable speakers, among them being Mr. Hermon Eldredge, who is our secretary of religious education; Dr. H. B. Holloway, State superintendent of schools of Delaware; Governor William D. Denney, of Delaware; Dr. D. M. Helfenstein; Rev. W. H. Hainer; Chancellor J. O. Wolcott, of the State judiciary; Dr. W. G. Sargent, Providence, R. I.; Rev. James H. Lightbourne, of Holland, Va., and others.

Miss Martha A. Denison, daughter of Rev. W. H. Denison, is the director of religious education for the Church, and is already busy enlisting recruits and in giving entertainment and instructions to the young people who have already enlisted. Mr. Hermon Eldredge has been on hand for several days organizing department for active work.

We extend heartiest congratulations to our good brother, Dr. Helfenstein, and to the good people who have stood with him in building and equipping this magnificent plant. It is a great asset to the city of Dover and the State of Delaware, and through it there should be moral and spiritual uplift for Dover and community. Happy people, fortunate pastor, ample equipment, working together with God, should and will accomplish great things for good in helping to build up the kingdom of God.

"PRINCIPLES AND GOVERNMENT."

A committee of the Southern Convention recently placed in my hands for sale 375 copies "Principles and Government of the Christian Church." This is the revised edition, and any who may wish a copy may now secure one by sending the request, with the price (50 cents per copy), to the undersigned. The books are kept in the vault of the Library of Elon College, where, by the way, other valuable printed matter and records of the Convention have been deposited for safekeeping.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The world does not realize how much it owes to dissatisfaction. A satisfied world would be a stagnant world. A satisfied life would be a finished life. It was dissatisfaction that led the Pilgrim Fathers to leave the old country and cross the Atlantic to find in this country Christian freedom. It was dissatisfaction that made the American Revolution and this republic. Pain calls in the doctor. Poverty develops energy. Hunger hunts food. Sin cries for mercy. "At ease in Zion" makes no progress. Muddy roads give us concrete highways. Ignorance builds schools. It is the dissatisfied that propose or demand improvements. It was the dissatisfaction of the people with saloons that gave us prohibition. Dissatisfaction is the mother of invention. Jesus was dissatisfied with the human race, and suffered to save a lost world; but, "He shall see of the travail of His soul, and shall be satisfied." Satisfaction comes in the completion of a purpose. "We shall be satisfied, when we awake with his likeness." All discovery, invention, education, improvements, are made because of dissatisfaction.

Retirement from business, or service, usually ends in dissatisfaction when it is too late to recover. But dissatisfaction with present attainments or achievements leads to improvement and progress. Dissatisfaction with house, farm, machine, stock, business, prophesies plans and efforts for better conditions. It tears down old Churches and builds new ones; it cleans up old graveyards; it paves new streets; it builds new school-houses; it builds Sunday School rooms; it puts in new hymn books; it puts down new carpets; it sings new songs, preaches new sermons, pays more money into the Lord's treasury; it moves forward. Pain is a friend because it makes us stop and consider, and then seek a remedy. Conviction for sin is nothing but spiritual dissatisfaction. Then repentance begins, prayer is offered, confession is made, and, finally, profession. Religion begins in dissatisfaction with self, and self-dissatisfaction is the best type of dissatisfaction. A dissatisfied Church is a progressive Church. A dissatisfied city is a progressive city. A dissatisfied world is a progressive world. It crosses the seas, tunnels the mountains, erects the monuments, passes the laws, writes the books, and feeds the world. Progress is often interpreted in terms of greed when it is nothing but the material expression of a benevolent dissatisfaction with conditions that nothing but enterprise can correct. The rich are often misjudged when they are striving to supply what many need. There is, no doubt, such a thing as unconscience benevolence. Men are investing money, talents, energy, enterprise, because they are dissatisfied with present achievements. Such enterprise opens up new fields for labor, for business, for education, and all the benefits that benefit mankind. Nothing is more pitiable than to see people satisfied in ignorance, rags, dirt, and sin.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

We cannot do better in our Elon Letter this week than to quote at length from the report of the Board of Christian Education to the General Board of our Church. This quotation sets forth the ideals of this board in comprehensive fashion. The General Board approved these ideals and purposes without a dissenting vote. We quote as follows:

"It is now two years since the General Convention created the Board of Christian Education and said of its duties it 'shall have charge of all the Convention interests connected with Christian Education.' We have from the first realized the enormity of our task, but in detail the sense of its obligations increases as we have undertaken to 'survey, outline, promote and direct a full program of Christian education and training for Christian life and service reaching from our homes through our Churches, communities, schools and colleges.'

"There has been to us a painful realization of misunderstanding of our duties on the part of other boards of the Church, of leaders in the field, and of the public generally. We have in every instance endeavored to clarify any such situation that came to our attention. When our plans were suggested and adopted in 1922, we called particular attention to the fact that our educational program should be in thorough cooperation with the other boards. Our secretaries are urged always to learn the mind of the brethren and to work for harmony in administration. We have a standing committee on 'co-operation with other Church boards.'

"There is a sense in which every experience of life is educational. Our board understands that its field is limited, however, to the recognized agencies and methods of what is generally known as the teaching function. Subjects desired to be taught by any of our boards, we are ready to promote and to assist any board in promoting through the teaching agencies we already have, to the discouragement of new organizations in a field already overorganized and, therefore, seriously complicated, with special reference to the Church year. We fully acknowledge that we need the closest co-operation of the other boards of the Church as to the content of the curriculum of Christian education as it affects their several departments. In keeping with this consideration, we have from the very first asked the other departments to keep us fully informed of their objectives and achievements, so that we could incorporate them in our treatment of the lessons we edit and in the papers and periodicals we prepare. We also asked the proper secretaries to prepare for us a pamphlet each on stewardship, on missions, home and foreign, and on evangelism, which we would issue and circulate, and in accordance with which we would promote the teaching of these subjects so vital to a complete program of Christian education in our Church or any other.

"These things are said that there may be complete understanding on the part of the entire Church that our board is approaching its great tasks in the spirit of genuine co-operation with other boards and in the desire to render due response to the obligations imposed on us by the General Convention. We cannot forget either that the eyes of the Christian world are upon us in our undertaking along these lines. We must not begin so good a work and turn back. Our hands are to the plow, and the only direction we can face is to the fore."

We also quote from the general secretary's report to the Board of Christian Education an analysis of what this board has achieved in the two years of its existence. Surely we have reason to rejoice over these achievements. We quote as follows:

Record of Two Years' Work.

1. Integrated our editorial and field force into a well-working unity, with the co-operation and sympathy of the Christian Publishing Association.
2. Placed four employed secretaries in the full-time service of the Churches.
3. Greatly improved our Sunday School literature.
4. Assisted in maintaining all the summer schools we previously had, and instituted two others.
5. Paid over to our colleges $30,000.
6. Invested in scholarships to aid our ministers and all-time Christian workers in training, slightly more than $10,000.
7. Paid to the interdenominational agencies with which we are affiliated $2,700, and been represented at their gatherings by such leaders as Hermon Eldredge, Mrs. F. E. Bullock, W. G. Sargent, A. B. Kendall, F. G. Coffin, W. P. Fletcher, E. A. Watkins, Clarence Defar, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, and H. Shelton Smith, whose expenses we paid.
8. Aided several of our pastors in attendance on summer schools in universities.
9. Issued pamphlets and posters for our department that have gratified our own people and won favorable comment from others.
10. Sent Dr. F. G. Coffin to give a course of lectures at Yale, and Hermon Eldredge to represent us at the Glasgow Convention of the World's Sunday School Association.
11. Held institutes of Christian education and conducted specific experiments in many places.
12. Systematically divided the service of our field force among the several regional conventions.
13. Co-operated with the other General Convention departments in visiting the Conferences, Conventions, and other gatherings of our people.
14. Conducted a religious education survey of our entire Church.
15. Appointed regional directors of Christian education in each of the five regional Conventions, Conference directors in most of the Conferences, and local Church directors in many of the local congregations, and through these voluntary servants of the kingdom have been able to achieve many notable things.
15. Discovered misunderstandings of what we are endeavoring to achieve and of what is expected of us, all the way from the Convention officers to the members of local congregations, all of which we have earnestly endeavored to clarify, though not with complete success, because we are pioneering, and the way is not charted for us by our own or any other's experience.
17. Committed several blunders, for which we are deeply penitent and which we shall hope to profit by in the future conduct of our work.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Success.

Cheerfulness is the next qualification to success. You may possess all other qualifications, and without the spirit of good cheer be a failure. There is room in every life for more cheerfulness. A smile will open almost any door. A countenance warped out of shape with a frown will cause the door to be shut in its face. No one wants to be bothered with a grouch. If you have nothing but a tale of woe, tell it to the policeman. Listen to the wails and woes of others with an attentive ear and extended sympathy, but if possible be cheerful yourself; for if you are downcast and woebegone, then you are a pessimist. If you are cheerful, you are an optimist, and an optimist creates and builds up, while a pessimist pulls down. Be a creator and upbuilder if you will have all men glad to see you. Be a living tabernacle of the gospel of good cheer. The pessimist is afflicted with a mental squint. He looks through colored glasses. Everything seems to be unfair and crooked to his way of thinking. The universe is out of joint with him. To the straight, clear-minded, generous-hearted individual, all things are good, or leading in that direction.

The sixth qualification of success which we will mention is enthusiasm. This is the invigorating spirit that puts life and zeal into one's work. Enthusiasm is more contagious than measles. All the world loves a lover. Why? Because he is ardent, enthusiastic, full of zeal and devoted to his ideal. To attain the highest altitude in the realm of success you must soar there on the wings of enthusiasm. You can never get there wearing the wooden shoes of the lazy, the easily satisfied, and the mediocre. Enthusiasm illumines all you attempt to do. It makes every effort glisten with the radiance of manliness, honesty, and fixedness of purpose.

The successful person dreams of great success at night, and goes about his task the next day with his heart full of faith, and hope, confident that he will not labor in vain. There is nothing to hinder him but himself. The ladder of life is before him, and all he has to do is to climb.

This applies to students in Bethlehem College and our whole college program. When we get our thinking apparatus working smoothly, our hands and feet will do the rest.

Wadley, Ala. S. L. BEOUGHER.

FROM WALTERS, VA.

The revival at Antioch was held at the usual time the week after the third Sunday in September. Dr. W. D. Harward, from Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., came on Monday and did the preaching, and he did it well. Dr. Harward is a man of prayer and faith, and he preaches the word with great power. There was no fault to be found with the preaching.

We had, after the first few services, a large congregation. We had a good meeting, and while there was not the revival in the Church we had hoped for, many came forward expressing their desire to get near to, and do more for, the glory or God. And we feel that the work of the Church was greatly strengthened. About thirty joined the Church by profession of faith, letter, or rededication.

The Church has taken a renewed interest for the past few months. They have called Dr. Harward to serve them for the coming year, and there is every reason to believe that the work will go forward and there will be great work done in the future for the glory of God and the salvation of man.

Antioch has some that are faithful and true, men and women of faith and prayer; and my prayer is that God will hear their prayers and bless their efforts, that He may be glorified and men saved. ELISHA BRADSHAW.

EASTERN N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference will meet this year at Pleasant Union, Harnett County, Tuesday, November 18th, at 10 A. M., and will continue in session for three days.

All Churches are urgently requested to send a full delegation and to meet all their apportionments in full, if possible. Delegates and reports should be in Conference at the opening session, so that officers and committees may be enabled to complete their work on time. It is hoped that all delegates and ministers will be present at the opening of Conference and continue in attendance until the close. We need their assistance in working out the plans of the Church for the State, and they need the information concerning what is undertaken, that they may carry reports back to their respective Churches. This is the only method by which we can do efficient work and develop the cause of the Church in the most successful manner. Fraternally yours,

W. C. WICKER, President.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia met at Holy Neck, Friday, October 10th. An immense audience and a great delegation from Churches and societies foregathered for the occasion. All people everywhere just naturally love to go to Holy Neck. And all the women and many of the men of Eastern Virginia Christian Churches just naturally love to attend the Woman's Missionary Conference. Enthusiasm runs high, the fellowship is delightful, business is transacted on a large scale and with dispatch, and a wholesome inspiration prevades the entire program and occasion.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, now of Greensboro, has been president of this body since its organization twelve years ago, and has done great work in the Conference. She presided over the meeting, but because of having removed to Greensboro to live, she could not further hold the position. For the coming year, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, who has been the efficient treasurer, was elected president, and Mrs. W. V. Leathers, who has been the wide-awake superintendent of young people's work, was made treasurer. Mrs. R. T. Bradford was elected superintendent of young people's work, and the other officers, so far as we can recall, were re-elected, namely: Mrs. M. J. W. White, vice-president; Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary; Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, superintendent of literature, and Mrs. J. H. Baker, superintendent of cradle roll.

Holy Neck, of course, entertained the Conference most cordially, and served a regal repast at the noon hour, as is her custom.

The treasurer's report showed that during the past year women's societies paid $3,741.04; young people's societies, $1,417.10; willing workers' societies, $525.62; cradle roll, $98.52; rally day, $26.82, making a grand total for the year of $5,809.10. The goal of this Conference for the coming year is $6,000, and it is easy to believe that the goal will be reached. The Conference next year meets with Liberty Spring Church.

To show their esteem and appreciation of Mrs. Rowland, who has rendered invaluable aid in building up the woman's missionary work in their midst, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, as spokesman, in beautifully chosen words, presented Mrs. Rowland with a beautiful diamond-set stick pin, the money for which has been contributed by various individuals of the societies. Mrs. Rowland, of course, knew nothing of the matter until Mrs. Bryant took the floor and swept Mrs. Rowland off her feet with the glad surprise. Mrs. Rowland responded appropriately under suppressed emotion and expressed her deep gratitude for the beautiful token of esteem.

One feature of the Conference was notable, in that the great majority of ministers of the Eastern Virginia Conference were in attendance on the occasion. This was appreciated by the women, and the day must have been very edifying and inspiring to the ministers. One could most heartily wish that the ministers in all of our Conferences would give the same heed and aid to the woman's missionary work that our ministers in Eastern Virginia do.

TO OUR CONFERENCES.

Within the past decade or so a new tone has come into our denominational life. The spirit of propagation has been growing among us again, and a number of very promising Churches have been started. The Eastern Virginia Conference has led the way, and some of our other Conferences are now also actively engaged in propagating new Churches. Others must take up the work. Every Conference should have a continuous policy of Church extension. Every Conference should plan to be building a Church somewhere all of the time, organizing a new one just as soon as the one on hand is well started. Such organization plans would be wisely and skillfully made in consultation with our Church extension department—but no Conference should feel that it has the right type of life within it unless it has the spirit to propagate and build new Churches. At every Conference session this year, this ought to be a matter of careful consideration, and the Conference ought to be made to face the fact of how many years it has been since it attempted to propagate Churches within its bounds. But basic to all this must come a clarified appreciation of our own denominational position and a deepened sense of its worth and responsibility to the world. Our colleges, our periodicals, our Sunday School literature, our pastors, all must promote this. They must give our people a deeper love for our own denomination and a finer willingness to sacrifice for its propagation—and do so without giving them the sectarian spirit. It is a delicate and difficult matter to teach denominational appreciation and loyalty without making one sectarian; but it can be done—and it must be done if the Christian denomination is to live and to achieve what God must have put it into the world to do. If the Christian Church stands for something unique and different, let us make our own people understand what and why. The Herald calls upon our leaders, our colleges, and our Conference officials, and our pastors and lay workers to think this thing through until they realize how vital is the spirit of propagation to the life and welfare of any movement. The Church or the Conference that will not propagate will surely, surely die!—Editorial in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

We are seeking by all the honest efforts and devices we know to give every subscriber to Men and Millions an opportunity of paying his or her pledges. The amount of pledges made and the amount not yet paid is being sent by mail or given in person to every subscriber. Mr. James Bradford is assisting us by visiting all who pledged and are yet due something on their pledges in the Valley of Virginia Conference. Rev. A. H. Sheppard is doing the same in the Georgia and Alabama Conference; Rev. J. D. Dollar and Rev. E. M. Carter are doing the same in the Alabama Conference; Miss Gertrude Brown, a fine, good Christian woman, of Elon College, N. C., is assisting us personally in the North Carolina Conference. At an early date we hope to announce the one who is to help us in the Eastern Virginia Conference. It has been determined by the Mission Board to give all a chance to pay up or to adjust their accounts in some way between now and December 20th. We know that many want to pay and have only lacked the opportunity. Many have not known the amount they were due. This we wish all to know.

We never started and have never carried on a holier movement than this one, fraught with greater consequences for the Church and its enterprises. Those who are representing the movement will be, I am sure, received with courtesy and given the glad hand and all the help possible in their work. Let us do this great, good work in the name of our Lord and for the sake of our dear Church.

TWO CONFERENCES AND 11 INSTITUTES.

Western Indiana.

The last week of August, it was the writer's privilege to take part in the program of the Western Indiana Conference. Already the Herald has contained an account of those taking part in the various sessions, but something should be said about the Conference folk themselves. Browns Wonder people deserve credit for the way they entertain a Conference, for the beautiful little Church that really beautifies the open country place which it serves, and for the almost reverent way in which they care for the resting-place of the dead. One might hope that before long they would use some of their available space as a playground for the living. This is the Conference of the McKnights, the Woodworths, and Mrs. Fry; is in fine condition financially, splendidly supports missions, and is loyally and efficiently led by President W. P. Kibbey and Secretary W. H. Zenor. The one great need for a useful future is parsonages and resident ministers, pastoral work and local religious leadership. That sentence does not look well grammatically, but I mean it that way, for the need is one and singular.

Eel River.

The next week was spent with the Eel River brethren. This is a six-day Conference, and is institutional and inspirational as well as business. Practically all their ministers come to the Conference and stay throughout. The Conference is held every year at Winona Lake, where they own a fine tabernacle, and if it loses in warmth because of there being no local entertaining Church, it gains in beauty of surrounding. It seemed at first as though it were a Conference of older folk, old men filling the offices and carrying on the work, and one began to wonder about the future of the work. Judge Whitlock will never be old in spirit, and seemed, upon this occasion, as young as he was twenty-five years ago, but he and his fine associates cannot indefinitely carry on. Later on in the Conference some splendidly prepared younger men were received into fellowship (and that is the word to use after you have heard Judge Whitlock's welcome and charge to them), and Eel River's splendid past will be but the challenger of a more glorious future.

Western Illinois.

The next eleven days were spent in the territory of the Western Convention. The first two days were spent in the Western Illinois Conference, the first day with Rev. J. B. Speaker and his new charge at Olive, and the second with the people cared for by Rev. Robinson Ashby, so long known to our Herald readers. Then into Iowa for meetings afternoon and evening at Oak Grove, Antioch, Fairview, Truro Linden, Madrid, Ferguson and Barnes City, and for morning and evening meetings, Sunday September 14th, at Hill of Zion. How I wish more of our men could have the joy that I am having in fellowship with these fine folk, both lay and ministerial. I came away from the Western Convention territory with much the same impressions I have had in many other parts of our Zion—what fine people there are in the Christian Church, what appalling opportunities we have, and how we do need men. Olive Church, in Western Illinois, stands all by itself in the open country, and Bro. Speaker has an opportunity to challenge any man. At Piatt, a little village and a good farming community, depend almost entirely upon Bro.

Ashby. There are other places where ours is practically the only Church, but that Conference is dying out because there are no men to occupy the fields. I know full well that the Churches have not been trained to adequately support their religious leaders, but some one must go and show them how. It would be of inestimable value to our whole Church and the kingdom, and I am sure to the preachers themselves, if every young preacher were to resolve to spend at least the first ten years of his ministry out in these needy fields. His expenses then are light, and his children young and not yet ready for the higher schools and colleges. The country viewpoint will help him even if later on he becomes a great metropolitan preacher.

Iowa.

Oak Grove and Antioch have each a large constituency for service, the former being blessed with a parsonage. Just now, however, it is empty, as these two Churches are being supplied by an English Disciple, who lives some distance away. Fairview and Rev. O. C. Huff are splendidly fitted to each other, for the Church has an almost unlimited field and the minister almost unlimited energy. Very fine work in religious education is here being done, but "eye hath not seen" what they might do if on their fine property they had a parsonage and a parish house. At Hill of Zion, Rev. Rue Burnell and his Church have undisputed sway over a whole township. Every department of their work is "on high," and they have just begun. Rev. Fred Cooper has just moved to Truro, and has hardly had time yet to survey his field. The work here is a little more cut up and needs the rejuvenating power of a group of young people. But watch the Herald for word from Truro. Linden, for the time being, is pastorless. Rev. A. C. Burnham, the Iowa pioneer, is here, but the glow of sunset is upon his face. Rev. R. A. Lewis is also near, but he preaches in Churches elsewhere. A young man of unquestionable enthusiasm is needed here. Madrid is a joy to the field man, and is surely a joy to heaven. They have the best Church plant for religious education work of any of our Iowa Churches, and they are using every inch of it. One would like to see their beginners and primaries in cheerier quarters, and if I were speaking to their adults alone, I would have liked to whisper that a trade of places would be splendidly Christian. Rev. Jesse Kauffman is not the town Mayor, but he seems to be the chief man, and is everybody's friend. Ferguson, well this was different. Rev. L. E. Follansbee and a dozen of his workers came over from Le Grand, and Rev. R. L. Raybourn and probably thirty of his people drove over from Clemons, and they, with the Ferguson folk, filled the house. Here are young people in swarms, with our Church the only Church, and a consolidated school right beside them. The consolidated school has teachers, but the only Church has not a preacher. May the Lord of the harvest thrust forth one for them. Forest Home in the afternoon, and Barnes City in the evening, the two Churches served by Rev. F. M. Strange, finished my Iowa work. Two good meetings were held in spite of rain and mud. Great work is just bound to be done here, for their pastor is just what a pastor ought to be—loving, progressive and persistent. This was evidenced when, after the evening meeting, this selfsame pastor, knowing that the field man had been four weeks away from home, "Forded" him twenty miles through Iowa mud, that he might get a night train for Chicago and "home sweet home."

God bless these great Western workers and this great western work, and send them laborers for the harvest! W. P. FLETCHER.

Dayton, Ohio.

AN APPRECIATION.

As Bro. C. E. Gerringer is leaving us at the end of this year, we wish to express to him and his family a few words of appreciation for what he has so faithfully tried to do for the Church as pastor and us as a people.

Serving as pastor of our Church the third year, we join in saying that to our knowledge we have never had a more faithful and energetic pastor.

He is faithful in the discharge of every duty that pertains to the Church, and in the help of the betterment of humanity he knows no denomination. Living in our midst during this time, we think we know something of his true worth.

As to his moral character, we have no reason to believe otherwise than that he is a high-toned Christian gentleman in every respect.

He has taught in the public schools twice in our community, and we can honestly say that we have never had a more consecrated and efficient teacher.

We agree in saying that the Church or school is indeed fortunate that secures his service. We, whom he has labored among, will ever cherish the associations of him and his family and pray God's richest blessings upon him wherever he is called to labor.

NEW HOPE REVIVALS.

A series of evangelistic meetings was held in New Hope Church, Virgilina, Valley Central Conference, September 14-28, that resulted in much good. The meetings began with a prayer meeting on Sunday night, September 14th, and closed with a prayer meeting Sunday night, September 28th, no minister being present either of these nights

Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, Va., came to our assistance on Monday, September 15th, and did the preaching and conducted the singing from then on through Friday night, September 26th. We were also ably assisted during the meetings by a band of Christian laymen from Harrisonburg, known as "Codle's Crusaders," or "Crusaders for Christ." Bro. Morgan preached some mighty fine sermons, and his singing was grand. The people of the Church and community were highly pleased with him. As a result of the meetings, eight persons professed faith in Christ, three of these being elderly people, four uniting with New Hope Church; and the Church was stirred and strengthened spiritually as it has not been before in years.

NOTICE.

All Churches of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, please take notice that the next session of the above Conference will meet at Apples Chapel Church November 11, 12, 13, 1924, and you are asked to please elect your delegates at your earliest convenience and send their names and how they expect to come to D. E. Michael, McLeansville, N. C.

Those who care to, can reach the Church by auto, it being on a sand-clay road, between Gibsonville and Reidsville, and those who come by train will be met at Brown Summit and Gibsonville. See that your Church is represented, for a cordial welcome awaits you.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 2, 1924.

Subject: "The Prodigal Son—World's Temperance Sunday."

Golden Text: "I will arise and go to my father."—Luke 15:18.

Reference Material: Matt. 18:12-14; Luke 15:1-10.

The story of the prodigal son is nineteen hundred years old. And yet it is ever fresh and new. It is so true to life that it might have been told yesterday. It is being told every day in hundreds of lives all around us. He who spake as never a man spake before, spoke at His best in this matchless story.

It is a very simple story. There are only five hundred and ten words in it, and many, in fact most of them, are monosyllables. The whole story can be read in three or four minutes. And yet it is as profound and deep as the sea. For here are practically all the fundamentals of the Christian religion. The Fatherhood of God, our filial standing in the family of God, our dependence on God, the nature of sin, retribution, conviction of sin, salvation, faith, repentance, forgiveness, open confession of sin, consecration, witness of the Spirit, heaven begun on earth, even a doctrine of the atonement—all are here in this simple but inexhaustible story. We call Him the Great Teacher, and we do well, for such He is.

One of the characters in the story was a young man. He had, perhaps, many things that people usually associate with happiness. But he was dissatisfied; he wanted to see the world; he wanted to live his own life. He was supremely selfish and self-willed. And he demanded of his father his share of the family estate. His words, "give me," are more than a request; they are an arrogant demand, and a revelation of his disregard of his parents' interests and wishes. The younger son represents many young people today. The species is not extinct.

He went into a far country. He may have gone many miles. In this particular case, he did. But a far country is not a matter of miles or geography; it is a matter of ideals and attitudes. A young person may be living in the same home with others, and still be in a far country. Any young person who is living a life that he does not want his parents to know about, is living in a far country, or is on his way there. The young men or young women who have forsaken the high ideals of their parents are in a far country.

He wasted his property, living dissolutely. In that far country, he found a "gang" or a "set" which helped him to "go through his pile." Any young man can find a crowd to help him spend his money. And he wasted his money. But worse of all, he wasted his life. He probably had talent and ability, but he was spending it on "fast living," wine and women and song. What a picture of life today!

And he began to be in want. After he had spent all, his "crowd"—I will not say friends, for he did not have friends—left him. And when the famine came—famine of more than one kind comes in the wake of riotous living—and after he had spent all, "he began to be in want." He was so "hard up" that he got a job feeding swine. He, a Jew, feeling the hated swine! That was adding insult to injury. But that is just what sin always does. And any person who lives an ungodly life will come to just such low estate. The wages of sin is death. The way of the transgressor is hard.

And then "he came to himself." His adversity made him think. And sober thinking showed him his folly and his sinfulness. Here he was, a son of his father, away off here in the fields with swine, while even the servants in his father's house fared better than he. If only we could get people to think! If only the ungodly would see how foolish they are! Perhaps it would be better if adversity would strike them down and give God a chance to get into their thoughts.

He said: "I will arise" and "I will go," and "I will say." And he "arose" and he "went" and he "said." He suited resolution to action. He obeyed that impulse. It would be interesting to know his thoughts as he trudged back over the hard, rough road home. But we who have come to a realization of our human folly and sin know something of what was going on in his mind. The fact that he went back is evidence that he meant business. His repentance was genuine.

And now the scene changes. The central figure is the father. Any father or mother with a wayward son or daughter knows what had been going on in that father's heart all the days his boy had been away. And he had been watching for the boy to come back. He was watching now. For while "he was a great way off," his father saw him, and was moved with compassion, and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him. Here is a picture, not only of the love of a true father or mother, but of the eternal heartache and heartbreak of the Father over His wayward children. When we speak of reconciliation, let us remember that the Father is already reconciled; we need to be reconciled.

The father's forgiveness was full and final. He would not even allow his boy to finish his confession. And he ordered "the best robe," and a ring, and shoes, and the fatted calf. There's a wideness to God's mercy like the wideness of the sea.

Things We Should Learn from the Lesson.

1. The first step toward the far country is willfulness.
2. The far country is not a matter of miles or geography.
3. The command of the unregenerate heart is "give me"; the request of the regenerate heart is "make me."
4. Life is not to be judged by the "speed" at which it is lived.
5. Fast living always brings a bad harvest.
6. The way of the transgressor is hard.
7. Sin eventually brings men down to the level of swine.
8. Friends of fast livers are not friends indeed.
9. Adversity is often a blessing in disguise.
10. The greatest discovery a man can make is the discovery of himself.
11. It is a long road from resolution to realization.
12. Repentance at its best is a thoroughgoing change of life.
13. Salvation is a process of self-recovery, self-realization.
14. Man goes from God on his own free will; he must come back in the same way.
15. A recognition of God's goodness inevitably produces a sense of unworthiness.
16. God seeks us even before we seek Him.
17. The Father receives all who come to Him in penitence and faith.
18. The man who is not living in fellowship with the Father is losing the best things in life.
19. It is a time of joy when the lost is found.

THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The twenty-sixth annual session of the Alabama Christian Conference was held at Pleasant Grove Church, in Chambers County, October 14-15th. All sessions were very largely attended, the Churches were well represented, and while the offerings did not cover the entire amount apportioned, there was an increase over last year. The Conference statistician also reported a slight increase in membership of the Churches. One new Church was admitted to the Conference. All the officers of the previous year were re-elected, namely: Rev. C. W. Carter, president; Rev. J. D. Dollar, vice-president; Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary; Bro. J. W. Payne, treasurer.

The Conference convened at 10 A. M. on October 14th and spent an exceedingly busy day in routine work for the most part, enrollment of ministers and delegates, election of officers, reading of ministerial and Church reports, filling vacancies, etc. At the close of the morning session, Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of Bethlehem College, delivered a most timely and thoughtful address and one calculated to inform and inspire the Conference. It was generally regretted that immediately after his address, Dr. Beougher had to leave the Conference for a trip to Dayton. Dr. Beougher is held in high esteem by his brethren of the Conference, and seems to have won their profoundest respect and their ready co-operation in the work he is doing in their midst.

In the afternoon, Rev. C. W. Carter made the report of the executive committee, and Bro. J. W. Payne reported for the committee on moral reform. Rev. G. D. Hunt, chairman, made the report on superannuation and recommended that the Conference raise an amount for superannuation equal to 10 cents per member, this in keeping with the vote of the Southern Christian Convention in Norfolk last May.

At the evening session, the report of committee on religious literature was presented by Dr. T. H. Denny. This report recommended most highly The Christian Sun, and urged that special effort be put forth to increase its circulation. Bro. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor, was present and made timely remarks in behalf of The Sun, and urged those present to a livlier interest in the paper. He showed how, by subscribing for the paper, a real burden could be lifted from the Church, and from the lack of subscribers The Sun was being run at heavy cost to the Church. Rev. Sion M. Lynam, from Bethlehem College, and J. O. Atkinson, two of the editorial staff, were also present and made remarks relative to the value of The Sun in the home and the need for more subscribers. Subscriptions were taken, and several responded.

The second day of Conference began at 9 A. M., and was an exceedingly busy one. Dr. J. M. Welch, of Wadley, presented the report on foreign missions. Rev. Sion M. Lynam, of Bethlehem, delivered a most appropriate address on "The Place of the Denominational College in Church Life." Rev. G. D. Hunt, secretary, made the report for the committee on home missions, and after a most eloquent and fetching appeal, took subscriptions from individual members of the Conference to help the North Alabama work the coming year. The contributions amounted to about $300. The work in North Alabama goes well, and the Conference feels much encouraged over what has been accomplished there. Immediately following Bro. Hunt's address, there was a sermon by the mission secretary, J. O. Atkinson, and further contributions in cash and subscriptions were made to the extent of $50.

In the afternoon, the committee on education, by special order, presented its report. Rev. E. M. Carter made an earnest plea for support of Bethlehem College. Bro. J. J. Carter also made a brief address, telling of the urgent needs of the college. Conference adopted a motion, offered by Bro. Carter, that all Churches or Sunday Schools of the Conference take at least one special offering per quarter for Bethlehem. Conference then adjourned for the meeting of the Woman's Missionary Conference.

This Conference was presided over by Miss Siddie Latham, who made a good talk on our duty to one another and to those in less fortunate circumstances than ourselves. The devotional service for the Conference was led in a most appropriate manner by Miss Ammie Orr. Mrs. E. M. Carter, who was the secretary of the meeting, gave the favorite verses of great missionaries. Mrs. V. E. Kitchens gave a reading—"Cents for Christ and Dollars for Self." Miss Zanna Stephenson told of "Our Goals," and Miss Lois Calhoun spoke effectively on "Our Chief Ideals as a Missionary Organization." The mission secretary made a brief talk. The women of this Conference feel most happy over the fact that they are organized and have made a real beginning in missionary work. Mrs. E. M. Carter was elected president for next year, and through her motion the Woman's Conference will meet on a day next year entirely their own and separate from the annual Conference. It is hoped in this wise to create new interest in the work, since the two days' session of the General Conference did not seem to give them time for the necessary deliberations of their body.

Rev. G. H. Veazey made the report on Christian Endeavor before the General Conference, which reconvened after the adjournment of the Woman's Missionary Conference. Rev. G. D. Hunt presented appropriate memoirs and made very appropriate remarks pertaining to the life and the death of Revs. J. W. Elder and W. R. Knight, two beloved ministers whom the Conference lost by death the past year. Bro. J. W. Payne, as chairman, presented the report on apportionments, the Conference voting to endeavor to raise for benevolences and missions the coming year a sum equal to at least $1.00 per capita of the entire membership of the Churches in the Conference. This Conference shows marks of steady growth and a deep desire on the part of its loyal ministry and wide-awake laymen to take forward steps and to make progress in building up the kingdom of our Lord.

The next session is to meet with Beulah Church, near Wadley, Ala., Tuesday after the second Sunday of October, 1925. The Conference was one of fine fellowship and brotherly love. None of our Conferences move more smoothly than the Alabama.

Though it is without governmental recognition, a world peace congress attended by representatives of many countries has been meeting in Berlin, seeking to arouse sentiment which will make a recurrence of war impossible. One session was made notable by the presence on the speakers' platform of two generals—one German and one French—who opposed each other at the front in the World War, but who declared themselves as one in becoming confirmed pacifists because of what they had seen of war's horrors. Both asserted that partial, gradual disarmament was impractical, and that only complete general disarmament could save the world.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

DO NOT SACRIFICE THE QUALITY OF YOUR WORK FOR QUANTITY.

Is thoughtless, unguided energy the great drawback in your life? Do you think quickly, but not accurately, and hence move more slowly?

You are far from lazy, but you go to the other extreme and work under such high pressure that you make costly mistakes and waste time in making corrections. If you would think a moment, you would realize that most of your mistakes are the result of going too fast. A horse that has run away once is all but ruined.

You are "running away" with yourself every day and lessening your power to accomplish good work. If you employed a person who worked at such high speed as you do with the unfortunate results you produce you would look for some one who could accomplish more with less frenzied effort and more really balanced labor.

It is useless to turn out a lot of work if the quality is poor. You know whether you are this sort of person. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

TUESDAY.

CONSIDERATION HOSTS AND GUESTS SHOULD SHOW EACH OTHER.

The home that people like to visit is the one where no special effort seems to be made to entertain. Guests occasionally have a few things that they would like to do quietly and by themselves in their rooms. Often a quiet evening spent visiting with the family would be preferable to any other form of entertainment.

Every one likes to have time to relax. But there are some hostesses who do not realize this and wear out themselves and their guests with a constant tilt after exciting ways to spend the time.

The guest who cannot absent herself for a while each day is a most trying guest. In most homes there are duties which only the hostess can perform, and she should be given an opportunity to do them more easily by herself. Constant visiting with a guest is distracting and makes planning for the guest's comfort almost impossible.

This should be taken into consideration by those who visit their friends, and a little consideration lessens the extra work and makes it more pleasant on both sides. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

WEDNESDAY.

SAFETY OF THE YOUNG.

"Is the young man Absalom safe?"—2 Sam. 18:29.

Absalom was the proud, beautiful, ambitious son of David. Two streams of royal blood were flowing through his veins. He had the gift of diplomacy. But he stained his hands in his brother's blood, used the gift of diplomacy in wire-pulling, and attempted to usurp the throne of his father in a very treasonable manner. He broke his father's heart, caused the death of twenty thousand men, and died a traitor's death. He was not safe; he lacked religion in his life.

A short while ago, Richard Loeb and Nathan Leopold, Jr., sons of two of Chicago's multi-millionaires, kidnapped and killed an innocent lad, and sought to obtain a ransom. They had no need of money. Their every want seems to have been supplied. Why did they commit such a horrible crime? Why were they unsafe? They said they did it for the thrill. But the real reason is seen in that they had what they wanted and lacked what they needed. They needed religion. Our young people are safe, and only safe when the religion of Jesus controls the life.

Prayer.—Our Father, we pray for the safety of the young. Keep them close to Jesus, for in Him alone is there safety. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE TOUCH THAT TELLS.

"For she said within herself, If I may but touch His garment I shall be whole."—Matt. 9:21.

If we touch Jesus, He will touch us. Our touch may be simple, small; but His touch will be great enough to bring health and healing to the soul. When we touch Jesus it tells not so much because we touch Him, but because He touches us. The power, the healing and the blessing are bestowed when He touches us. Yet, we must lift our trembling hand and touch Him, so that His power may flow into us. There is power enough in Jesus to save the world, for all power in heaven and earth is given unto Him. But if the world is to be saved it must touch Him. Wherever we find a nation that Jesus has touched, we can tell it in many ways. Health, wealth and happiness follow. The world will be happy when Jesus touches it, and our greatest privilege is to lift up a sad, sinful world to receive the divine touch of its Saviour.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Jesus and His great love. We would ever cling to Him. We bring our children to Him, that He may touch them and bless them. Help us to lift up the weak ones, that they, too, may share His power and blessing. Amen.—T. E. White.

FRIDAY.

THE SPIRIT OF FORMALISM.

"It is the spirit that gives life."—Jno. 6:60-65.

When the spirit departs, religion becomes formalism. Jesus had no patience with the formalist. He had forgiveness for the harlot, for the thief, for the publican; He prayed for His own murderers, but He could not imagine how the Pharisees could get into the kingdom of heaven. The spirit had departed, and their religion was a hypocritical pretense; their prayers vain repetitions; their gifts a burlesque on philanthropy. Christianity without Christ-likeness is for worse than paganism. It would be better for us if we lived in darkest Africa where the name of Christ had never been heard than to be Church members without the spirit of the Master dominant in our hearts. Christianity imposes on its followers the greatest responsibility in the world —that of becoming like Christ. And this ideal can only be attained by constant, conscientious effort. "Abound more and more."

I read of two preachers' wives who were talking of their husbands and their Churches. Mrs. Jones told of how happy Mr. Jones was in his work. He was popular with his people; the Church was filled at all the services of worship; the Sunday School flourished; his visits in the homes of the community were welcome; he spent much time in his study and seemed to be growing in spirit and "in favor with God and man." As she talked, she sewed her husband's pants, and she was mending them at the knees.

Mrs. Smith, on the contrary, was despondent and discouraged. Mr. Smith did not like his pastorate. He felt that he should have had a better Church. The attendance at Church was poor; little interest was taken in the Sunday School; the people were worldly minded, and it was discouraging to visit among them, so he did not visit; there was no incentive to study, since his sermons were not appreciated; his time was spent at home reading, and he was anxious for the year to pass, so he could move. As she talked, Mrs. Smith was also sewing on her husband's pants, but she was mending them at the seat. "Quench not the Spirit." "Pray without ceasing." The continued investment of self is necessary for happiness in the Christian life.—Chaplain J. H. Brooks, U. S. N.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer.

SATURDAY.

PERFECTION.

We are to be satisfied with nothing less than perfection. It is the high ideal that Jesus has placed before us, and He has offered us His power to attain it. Heaven is perfection, and we shall learn it only by the earthly types through which we develop human nature to heaven's condition.

A man once in the penitentiary as a moral and social wreck, grew from a criminal to a national figure in the religious world. That's growing into perfection. Helen Keller overcame her deaf, dumb and blind condition by determination and courage, and she found her way to the world of love and beauty and God. That is growing unto perfection. There is no perfection of character which the resolute soul cannot attain.

SUNDAY.

THE ONLY WAY.

"How can we know the way?"—John 14:4-6.

A way is usually thought of as a thoroughfare, a place of travel; and it is under such a figure that Jesus speaks of Himself in these verses. Now, a way always leads in some definite direction. Jesus leads out of selfishness into service, out of sensuality into purity, out of wretchedness into peace, out of darkness into light.

Everywhere there is a deep-seated desire in the hearts of sin-cursed men to find the way out. Jesus is the way out, and the only way. Paul utters a cry which all men burdened with a sense of guilt and sin can understand when he says: "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death!" And his triumphant answer is the experience of all who have tried Jesus Christ as the deliverer, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord!"

Yes, He is the way out:

"Out of my bondage, sorrow and night,
Jesus, I come, Jesus I come
Into Thy freedom, gladness and light,
Jesus, I come to Thee;
Out of my sickness into Thy health,
Out of my want and into Thy wealth,
Out of my sin and into Thyself,
Jesus, I come to Thee."

—Rev. E. V. Cole.

Prayer.—That we may trust in Him who is "the way" to lead us safely out of all our troubles and to simplify our hardest problems.

NOTICE TO DELEGATES.

Delegates to the Western North Carolina Conference who expect to come by way of Millboro should notify me. Other delegates will be met at Randleman station. C. F. SWANEY,
Secretary.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

MY DEAR KIDDIES:

Your editor is a marvel for shifting responsibility. When she wants to take a vacation of two weeks or two days, she says, in such a charming way: "Mother, please write a letter to my Kiddies this week and tell them some nice stories." So here I am again, while the little lady herself spins over to Richmond to see her brother safely married.

Rusty has been fighting again. This time it was a tiny little bull dog named Dynamite, who dared to intrude in her master's office. Rusty gave one grawl and slapped Dynamite across the room. She also refused to ride on the shelf on the coupe with him, but sat in the foot of the car all the way home. Rusty still sticks to her buttered brown-bread toast, but she has recently added scuppernong grapes to the menu.

You children would adore Rusty.

I hope you are doing splendid work in school these lovely days, and that your report books were adorned with many big "A's." One dear little friend of mine was terribly disappointed because she only got "B's" on her first report.

Very soon now we will be thinking about Christmas, and Santa Claus does love studious children. Wonder how many of you know that one of the orphan children suffered a severe accident in dislocating his shoulder? How nice it would be to write him a letter and tell him you are sorry, or send some home-made candy. His name is Raymond Siler, and he will appreciate your thinking of him.

Let us hope that your editor will not try to run over any more big trucks on the Richmond trip and will be back on the job next week.

Yours with all good wishes.

MRS. T. A. MOFFITT.

CLEAR THE COAST!

"Clear the coast! clear the coast!" cried Albert and Frank, as they came downhill swiftly on Frank's new sled.

"Look out for that woman!" cried little Harry, who was standing at the top of the hill.

A poor German woman was crossing the road. She had a large basket full of bundles, which she carried on her head. In her right hand she had an umbrella and a tin pail, and on her arm another basket. Truly, seeing that the roads were slippery, she had more than her share of burdens.

She tried to get out of the way; but Frank's new sled was such a swift runner that it came near striking her, and caused her to nearly lose her balance, putting her at the same time into great fright.

"You bad boys, you almost threw me down!" she exclaimed, when she recovered from the start they had given her, and looked around to see if she had dropped any of her bundles.

But down the hill they rushed on their sled, Frank losing his hat in their descent, but little caring for that in his delight. The two boys, after reaching the foot of the hill, turned and began to drag their sled up again.

"That woman," said Frank, "called us bad boys. Let us tell her that we are not bad boys. We did not mean to run her down."

"Here comes Harry, running. What has he got to say?" asked Albert.

"I tell you what, boys," said Harry, "you'll be taken up if you run people down in that way."

"Why didn't she clear the coast when I told her to?" said Albert.

"Why didn't you steer your sled out of the way?" returned Harry.

"I didn't hit her, did I?" said Albert.

"No, but you were trying to see how near you could come without hitting her," replied Harry. "It's too bad to treat a poor old woman so!"

"So it was," said Frank. "What shall we do about it?"

"That's for Albert to say," exclaimed Harry.

"Well," replied Albert, "the right thing will be to offer to drag her bundles for her on the sled."

"That's it!" said the other two boys.

By this time they had reached the place where the poor woman was moving slowly along under her heavy burdens. She seemed very tired, and sighed often as she picked her way timidly over the frozen snow.

"We are sorry we frightened you," said Albert. "We did not mean to do any harm. Put your baskets on this sled, and we will drag them for you as far as you want to go."

"Well, you are little gentlemen, after all," said the woman, "and I'm sorry I was so vexed with you."

"You had cause," said Frank; "we were to blame."

Then she put her two baskets and the tin pail on the sled; and the three boys escorted her to her home, where she thanked them heartily for the way in which they had made amends for Albert's bad steering.—Uncle Charles.

THE LITTLE MARBLE HOUSES.

Once upon a time there was a little city, and in the little city there was a little curved street of shiny, white houses—beautiful, white-marble houses, all polished and clean. In each little house there was a little sister, Miss Nerve, and two little brothers, Artery and Vein.

For a long time, the owner of the little city kept the white-marble houses nice and clean, and all of the children were happy. But after a while the owner of the city began to eat too much candy and cake, and always wanted two big spoonfuls of sugar on his oatmeal. Because it was so sweet, he had to drink two big glasses of ice water, and then he would not drink his milk. This was so bad for him that he got to be very lazy and used to go to bed, leaving his work undone. Then weeds began to grow up around the shiny, white houses.

Soon the weeds were so thick and high around one of the little marble houses that the little imps could hide in them. These little imps had hammers and nails, and, hiding behind the weeds, they used to hammer away until they made tiny, tiny holes in the little white houses. After the holes were once made, it was very easy for the imps to make these holes larger.

After a little while, Miss Nerve used to shiver whenever the air blew in through the tiny holes; but when the holes got larger, she began to cry every night.

As the dirt in the street, which was no longer a nice, clean street, began to blow into the holes, little Miss Nerve became sick, and got worse and worse, until finally she died.

There was no one to clean up the little house and mend the holes in the walls, as the owner of the little town had grown lazier and lazier, so the wreckers had to come and pull away the house. The owner was sorry, and thought everything would be all right, but when he looked, he found a hole in the next little house.

So he knew he must get some masons to fill it, or little Miss Nerve, who lived in it, would also die. He was so sorry that he had been lazy that he stopped being greedy and went to cleaning up his city. He cleaned away all of the wreck and polished all the little houses so they looked like beautiful pearls. As there were no weeds to hide in, the little imps never tried to make holes in the houses of the little town again. The good fairies were so pleased that they started to build a new house where the old one had stood. Every night they built a little until after a while a beautiful new house stood where the old one had been pulled away, and it was taller and shinier than the old one.

Now, little folks, I wonder how many of you are the proud owners of a whole city full of marble houses. Of course, you must know that these little marble houses are really your pearly teeth.

I just wish that I could see each and every one of you to find out how many little boys and girls have been like the owner in the story. But I am sure if you have let a little Miss Nerve die, you know how badly it hurts, and will promise me that after this you are going to do just like the story says, and clean away all the weeds, which are nothing but food and stains which stick to the teeth. Then you must brush so hard and so often to chase away those little imps, because they love to hide between your teeth, or down in tiny little holes. Then when you forget them they begin again with their tiny little hammers and nails, and if you're not careful, some night soon you will have another awful toothache.—N. C. State Board of Health.

WISHES.

I wish there was no one to scold me,
I wish I could do as I please,
I wish I had plen-ty of mon-ey,
And no-bo-dy near me to tease.
I wish that I owned a nice po-ny
On which I could ride through the park
And I wish that my fa-ther would let me
Go out on the street aft-er dark.
I wish that my legs would grow long-er,
But as pa-tient I'll be as I can,
For it can-not be ma-ny years sure-ly
Be-fore I'm as big as a man.
And if I was sure it would raise me,
And hurry up things in the least,
I'd stop eat-ing ap-ples and can-dy,
And live upon noth-ing but yeast.

CONSIDER THIS.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

We rant and row and make a face
When things come tumbling out of place,
Or when we overlook a step
And sprawl unworthily in space.
But then, suppose the things we dropped
Fell half-way to the floor—and stopped?
Suppose we missed a step, and just
Trod air instead of biting dust?
If gravitation ceased to work,
'Twould fetch us up with right smart jerk!

THE BROOK.

Brook, brook, come along;
Run along with me!
Oh, what happy playmates
You and I will be!

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our little folks had some excitement one day last week when an aeroplane came through this community and circled over the Orphanage grounds so near the ground that the children could easily read the letters on the machine, and when it got over the Orphanage grounds it traveled very slow, so as to give the children a good view of the machine. It came at the noon hour when the little tots came out on the lawn from school, and all enjoyed the short entertainment. Many of them had never seen an aeroplane, and none of them at so short a range.

It is a busy time at the Orphanage, and especially on the farm. Sowing oats and clover, and making preparations for wheat is the order of the day. We hope to get our wheat in the ground by the 25th if we have good weather.

It is nearing Thanksgiving, and we are looking forward for a real Thanksgiving offering this year. It is necessary for our offerings to be increased, as the expense account naturally increases with the addition of children. Shoes, clothes and food to buy. We need your sympathy.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

ROSEMONT AND BEREA.

The Conference year is near its close. The Church year closed October 1st. We had two good revivals. Rev. G. O. Lankford did the preaching at Rosemont, and Rev. O. D. Poythress led the singing. There were sixteen conversions, twenty joined the Church, and many members were revived.

Bro. Poythress did the preaching and led the singing at Berea. There were thirteen conversions and fourteen joined the Church. Those who attended the meetings were greatly revived. It was a pleasure to hear "Red" and to be with him. He is a real live, unafraid preacher. He immersed all of the candidates of both Churches for me.

FORTEBEE

An External Treatment FOR TUBERCULOSIS

It is a great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Richmond, Va., says: "About eleven years ago, I developed active tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but without relief. About six years ago I used a bottle of FORTEBEE, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in three months I was perfectly well and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. FORTEBEE is the greatest treatment for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

This was received from Veanie McChee, Ellerson, Va.: "Since using FORTEBEE, I have good appetite, all pains are gone and I feel like a new person. My left lung was bad, and FORTEBEE healed it. Through the use of this remedy, I am glad to tell others about it."

This is a letter received from M. E. Gordon, Richmond, Va.: "A friend brought me a bottle of FORTEBEE. The first application was put on my chest, and for the first time in many weeks I could breathe freely without the catch in my side. After several applications, the pleurisy pains were dulled and then ceased entirely. Now, I am again at work, feeling stronger every day. It is a privilege to tell you the good FORTEBEE has done me."

Treat yourself at home by following the directions closely. People in all parts of the country are now ordering. Price per bottle, $2.50. Order direct from—

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nauseless Calomel tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water,—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

University President Talks Religion.—

Dr. David Kinley, president of the University of Illinois, created a fresh interest in religious work upon the campus of that great State institution when he made three addresses to freshmen in the beginning of the college year. Dr. Kinley's main topic was "College Students and Religion." He spoke on "Questions and Doubts," "Living One's Religion," and "Faith and Knowledge." In these addresses, President Kinley referred constantly to his own religious faith.

May it not be that we have been too severe in our criticism of the religious attitude of our State institutions? It is a fine thing when the president of one of them speaks his mind and testifies of his own faith in the things eternal.

Hughes Endorses Hospital.—

Secretary Charles E. Hughes has sent to the leaders of the Episcopal Church his endorsement of the campaign to raise funds for the rebuilding of the St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, Japan. Mr. Hughes sees in this undertaking a step toward better relations between the Japanese and American peoples. Dr. Rudolph B. Tuesler, famous head of the Tokyo Hospital, has said that since the passage of the new immigration law Japan has definitely turned her back on America and is fast gaining Russian friendship.

America can accomplish more for world peace with hospitals than with arms or arms conferences. The world is thinking in concrete terms, and hospitals are concrete. The Churches of America can do more for peace than can the government officials.

Crowns His Career.—

One of the outstanding careers in modern medical missions came to a climax in the opening of a new hospital for women lepers in Hangchow, China, by Dr. and Mrs. D. Duncan Main. Dr. and Mrs. Main came to Hangchow forty-three years ago; finding a single small building for the purpose of housing the entire Christian medical service in that city. From this they have built up a series of institutions which requires a staff of sixteen foreigners and one hundred and seven Chinese, that last year cared for 3,145 in-patients and 35,253 out-patients. The hospital contains 200 beds, and in addition there is a medical school, a nurse's training school, a school of pharmacy, a children's home, a leper hospital for men, isolation hospital for men, a consumptive hospital, a fresh-air home for men and for women, rest homes for workers connected with the mission, and the new leper hospital for women. Strange to say, the running expenses for the entire plant for the last year were less than $90,000.

The medical missionary has a rare opportunity. He heals the body, and through his healing gains admission to the heart, where he may also save the soul. Dr. Main has wrought well for the Master.

Prohibition Destroys Need.—

In spite of the assertions that prohibition does not work, it would be hard to convince the officers of the benevolent society of St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church, New York City, of the truth of that statement. For almost forty years this organization together with the loan association of the same Church, have been at work trying to relieve distressing social conditions in East Forty-second Street and its vicinity in that city. There is not enough work left to be done to warrant the continuance of their activities, and the rector, Dr. Leighton Parks, announces that the energy and money will be used in other forms of service. Prohibition and the rise in wages are responsible for the changed condition, Dr. Parks states.

People may assert that prohibition does not work, but facts are too numerous which disprove it for those who read at all to believe that prohibition has failed. We can make it work more perfectly by allying ourselves on the side of law enforcement.

No Desire for Social Equality.—

An address by Bishop C. H. Phillips, of the colored Methodist Church, has recently been published, in which the bishop said: "I have long been of the conviction that the negro does not ask for or desire social equality. . . . Simple, elementary justice and a square deal are earnestly desired by the negro. The World War awakened new hopes, new aspirations, and a new sense of self-respect in the breast of the negro. . . . Let us hope that when the reconstruction of the World War is finally accomplished that it shall have taught this country how to give the negro justice, how to respect his rights as a citizen, and how to allow him every reasonable opportunity for education and economic development."

In the above words, Bishop Philips has said some fine things, some things which the American people of Anglo-Saxon blood, and especially in the South, should give heed. The bishop declares that the negro has no desire for social equality, but he pleads for simple justice and a square deal. No one denies him this, in theory at least, but it is well known that many times a negro does not get just simple justice and a square deal in actual practice. He deserves this, and, as Christians, it behooves us to see that it be given him.

Co-Operation Kills Sectarianism.—

In Minnesota and Wisconsin, under the auspices of home missions, a series of conferences is now being held seeking to find the actual conditions in regard to churching in these States, and also to inaugurate corrective programs similar to those already undertaken in North Dakota, Idaho, and Montana. Statistics in these three States show less duplication and competition than was expected, and also that the neglected fields are yet numerous. In Montana, conditions are now said to be better in this respect than in any other State. Sectarianism in these States, declare the leaders of the Home Mission Council, has almost passed, and few denominationalists now stand out against the elimination of Churches clearly not needed and the division of the fields to avoid future duplication.

Wherever men and women come close enough to Christ to co-operate in the general interest of His kingdom, sectarianism dies. It ought to die! It may have had a purpose to serve, but that purpose is served and now it must depart from us.

An Excellent Spirit.—

Calvary Methodist Church, one of the strongest of that denomination in New York City, recently has been forced to seek a new home on account of the change of the population of the neighborhood, which has become almost a colored population. A strange negro congregation—the Salem Methodist Church—has purchased the property. On Sunday evening, September 28th, the Calvary congregation held the last service in its former home. The white congregation numbered seven hundred, which practically filled the main floor. The doors opened at 9:30 o'clock, and, led by its pastor, the Salem congregation, numbering one thousand, marched in. The choirs of the two Churches gave a musical program, and the pastor of the white congregation welcomed the colored pastor to the pulpit and parsonage that had been his own. The chairman of the negro board of trustees, in accepting the keys of the Church, said to the chairman of the trustees of Calvary, "You did not have to do it this way. You could have closed your services alone, locked up the Church and sent us the keys by messenger. We sincerely thank you that you asked us to come and join in this union service in brotherly, Christian fashion."

This uniting of the races in a religious service was done in truly a Christian fashion. Such things contribute to a better understanding between the races. We must recognize that each race has rights which the other must needs respect. Understanding is the prime need, and through it only can the solution of the problem come.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., is assisting Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, pastor, in a series of meetings at Reidsville, N. C., last week and this.

Rev. Jesse Dollar, a member of the senior class in Elon College, was called to Alabama very unexpectedly last Saturday evening on account of the very serious illness of an elder brother.

Go to the polls next Tuesday and vote! If you do not vote, you have no right to blame the other fellow for putting the wrong man in office. To use the ballot is not only a privilege, but a duty, so find the right man and give him your earnest support.

Are our Christian Conferences this year considering and discussing stewardship, or are we to go along in the same old indifferent manner? We notice that stewardship is given large place and great emphasis in the Conferences and councils of other Churches.

Rev. D. M. Helfenstein, D. D., is spending the winter with his son, Rev. Roy Helfenstein, Dover, Del. Some of our pastorless Churches would make a happy hit if they could secure him as pastor. He is a talented, consecrated and spiritually minded man, and we are hoping some of our Churches in the South will avail themselves of his services.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein's Church, Dover, Del., has voted him a brief vacation and sent him and his wife, with a voluntary purse to pay all expenses of the trip, to the Bermuda Islands. Dr. Helfenstein is serving his people with all the energy and strength he has, and this generous act on the part of his people is an evidence of wisdom as well as of benevolence.

The committee on memorials to Old Lebanon Church and to Rev. James O'Kelly meets at the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., at 9 A. M. this Wednesday, 29th of October, to decide on estimates and also the specific character of the markers to be erected. Dr. W. W. Staley, Mr. J. M. Darden, and President W. A. Harper, as subcommittee, are assisting the Convention committee on arriving at what is hoped will be proper and appropriate memorials.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. C., one of our young-old men, who declines to become feeble or inactive from accumulating years, is, we learn, willing to serve any Churches within his reach that may demand his services the coming year. Bro. Klapp is one of our ministers who has never asked for work, nor solicited place and privilege, but has always offered to work whenever and wherever the hand and voice of the Lord seemed to direct him.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

The Georgia and Alabama Conference met in its twenty-sixth annual session at Lanett, Ala., October 21-23. Rev. H. M. Gray, pastor of Lanett Church, was host, and also president of the Conference. The sessions began at 7:30 P. M. October 21st, with a lively and thrilling song service. Our Lanett Church is noted for its fine orchestra and large choir, and the Conference was much enlivened by the services of song. After the song service and President Gray had called the body to order, Rev. A. H. Sheppard, of Columbus, led the devotionals. Bro. Gray was re-elected president, and Miss Aylmer Goodwin, of Columbus, was made recording secretary. Bro. H. B. Floyd was re-elected treasurer. Following the election, Rev. H. M. Elder preached the Conference sermon, using as his theme, "Discovering and Using Our Possibilities." Bro. Elder delivered a very able and a most suggestive and helpful sermon. He showed that we had sufficient possibilities in the Christian Church to turn the world upside down for Christ if we would only discover these possibilities and lay them on the altar to be made into realities by our Heavenly Father.

On the morning of the second day, Rev. C. W. Hanson led the devotionals, and Rev. H. M. Gray read the report of the executive committee. The religious literature committee urged the necessity of reading our Church papers and emphasized the importance of having THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every family. Publisher P. J. Kernodle made an address on the blessings and benefits to be derived by the Christian home from having in it THE SUN. Several new subscribers were received and many renewed. After reading Church letters and much other routine matter, Rev. S. L. Beougher, D. D., president of Bethlehem College, delivered a very thoughtful and helpful address on "The Place and Power of the Christian College." Dr. Beougher said 102 students had enrolled at Bethlehem this year, and the capacity of the building had been reached. Other buildings must be erected to accommodate the growing needs of the two Conferences.

In the afternoon, Rev. S. D. Lankford conducted the devotionals. On motion, it was voted to hold the next session of Conference at Oak Grove, near Chipley, Ga. The afternoon was then consumed in reading and discussing reports of standing committees on (a) Sunday Schools; (b) moral reform; (c) foreign missions; (d) home missions; (e) young people.

An address was made on "The Sunday School and the Great Commission." The Conference voted that all schools in the Churches of the Conference take a monthly offering for missions.

Rev. W. H. Brewer led the evening devotionals, and class No. 2, of Lanett Sunday School, gave a concert of song that was greatly enjoyed by the large audience gathered for the final session of the day. Rev. H. W. Elder presided over the Christian Missionary Association, which has been alive and active in this Conference many years. One hundred dollars in dues were paid in.

Conference then was in session, and Superintendent C. D. Johnston made a very impressive and informing address on "The Christian Orphanage." The great audience greatly appreciated this address.

Dr. Beougher followed with an address on "Our Colleges," and spoke eloquently of the contribution our Christian colleges were making to our Church. Rev. H. T. Gray led the devotionals on the morning of the final session of the Conference, and the report on education was read and discussed. It recommended the ordination of three splendid men—Brethren Brewer, Lankford and Crowder—and the licensure of two promising young men. These were ordained and licensed in order, after a sermon by J. O. Atkinson.

The finest Christian spirit prevailed throughout the sessions, and the good people of Lanett entertained the Conference most royally. Pastor Gray is doing a great work and his people are devoted to him. It was good to be in this Conference.

CONFERENCES MEET.

Western North Carolina Conference meets on Wednesday after first Sunday in November (November 5th), 1924, with the Randleman Christian Church, Chas. F. Swaney, secretary of Church, Randleman, N. C.

North Carolina and Virginia Conference meets Tuesday after second Sunday in November (November 11th), 1924, at Apple's Chapel; D. E. Michael, secretary of Church, McLeansville, N. C.

Eastern North Carolina Conference meets Tuesday after third Sunday in November (November 18th), 1924, at Pleasant Union Christian Church, Harnett County; W. S. Long, secretary of Church, Lillington, N. C., Route 1.

N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Raleigh Christian Church has invited the North Carolina Christian Conference to meet with them at its next annual session, and the invitation has been accepted.

Conference will open Monday, November 24th at 8 P. M. The program is in process of preparation and will be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. All committees and speakers are urged to have their work in proper shape when it appears on the program.

The outstanding obligations of the Conference may be met at this session if each Church will do its full duty in raising the home mission apportionments. We are anxious to meet all these obligations at this session.

Every Church is urged to send in a full report, either by a person delegated or through the mail, by the opening session of Conference, so that the several committees may be able to do their work when they appear on the program.

Fraternally yours,

W. C. WICKER,
President.

REV. WILLIAM THOMAS WALKER.

By Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D.

Rev. William Thomas Walker was born in Caswell County, N. C., May 4, 1844, and died in Guilford County, May 26, 1895, aged fifty-one years and twenty-two days. He was the only son of Rev. George G. Walker by his first wife, and on his mother's side the great-grandson of Rev. James O'Kelly. He seems to have inherited largely the brave and heroic spirit of his illustrious ancestor. He was educated at Graham Institute, under those faithful and devoted men, Revs. John R. Holt and A. G. Anderson. He entered this institution in 1854. When the Civil War began, William T. Walker enlisted from Caswell County, in Company H, Sixth North Carolina Regiment, June 25, 1861. He was wounded at Seven Pines, near Richmond, and lost his arm May 31, 1863. He showed himself a brave defender of his country. His misfortune he regarded as a means, under God, of turning his mind towards a mightier and more important conflict against sin and for the salvation of the world. At the close of the war he married Miss Lessie Rudd, of Caswell County, and to them were born five children.

In 1867, he was licensed by the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, "as a probationer to preach the gospel"; at Salem Chapel, in Forsyth County, in 1868, he was recommended for ordination. The committee on education reported: "We further recommend that Bros. D. A. Long, R. C. Tuck, W. T. Walker, and J. W. Hatch be ordained elders in the Christian Church, they having conformed to all the requirements of the government of the Church." The ordaining presbytery was composed of Revs. T. J. Fowler, A. Iseley, J. N. Manning, and W. B. Wellons. The ordination sermon was preached by Rev. W. B. Wellons of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

In 1870, he served on the committee on temperance at the Conference held at Union, in Halifax County, Va., and during the year preached at Hines' Chapel, Salem Chapel, and Mt. Bethel. He was appointed chairman of the committee on temperance for the following year. At the Conference at Mt. Zion, in Orange County, N. C., he submitted the report on temperance in strong terms, saying in part: "Your committee would, therefore, urge upon all lovers of social order, cheerful homes, unclouded national councils, and all who would see the Church and our holy religion rid of one of the heaviest clogs that ever impeded its progress, to give their entire influence in favor of the great temperance reform, which so many of the good and great are endeavoring to push forward." His ministerial report shows that he had charge of three Churches, and had received twenty-eight into fellowship. In 1872, at the Conference at Shallow Well, Moore County, he was present and served on the committee on temperance. His report showed investigation and elicited much discussion, and was unanimously adopted.

At the Conference at New Providence, in Alamance County, in 1873, he preached the annual sermon, "an able and earnest discourse from the second chapter and fourth verse of Daniel." He was appointed a fraternal messenger to the Deep River (Western) Conference. He was present at the Conference at Hanks' Chapel, in 1874. This same year he was invited by the Valley Virginia Conference to take charge of the Churches in that field, and in 1875 he preached the annual sermon before that body at Linville Church, in Rockingham County, Va., from Zech. 4:10, "For who hath despised the day of small things."

At this Conference, he was made chairman of the committee on education and the executive committee. For the next two years he had charge of the Churches of the Conference and was chosen a delegate, in 1877, to the General Christian Convention. The Convention met at Lebanon, in Caswell County, N. C., in 1878. He was appointed on the committee of revision. He preached before the Convention "an excellent sermon" from Prov. 3:17, "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." This year he delivered the annual address before the Valley of Virginia Conference at Bethlehem, in Rockingham County, his subject being "Christian: the Name we Wear." He was appointed a fraternal messenger to the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences, and served on several committees.

This year closed his labors in the Valley. He attended the extraordinary session of the General Convention at Suffolk, Va., in 1879. At this time, he was pastor of the Christian Church in Suffolk. Just before accepting the pastoral charge of the Suffolk Church, he had returned from the Valley of Virginia to his home in North Carolina. By the Virginia Valley Conference at Antioch, in Rockingham County, he was granted a letter of transfer from it to the Eastern Virginia Conference at Windsor, Va., in 1879, of which he became a member. He was appointed a fraternal messenger to the Virginia Valley Conference, and to the North Carolina and Virginia. In 1880, he attended the Virginia Valley Conference at Linville Church, and preached twice before the Conference, and delivered a missionary address at Antioch Church in Rockingham County. In 1881 he attended the Valley Conference at Antioch as fraternal messenger from the Eastern Virginia Conference, and as editor of The Christian Sun, and preached the dedicatory sermon at Antioch on the first Sunday in September. He also attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Catawba Springs, in Wake County, N. C., as fraternal messenger, and preached before the body, from Ezek. 1:16, a most excellent sermon. The committee on religious literature recommended "the careful reading of The Christian Sun, published at Suffolk, Va., by Maj. D. B. Dunbar, and edited by Rev. W. T. Walker." He edited the "Annual" of the Christian Church for 1881.

In 1882 he was a delegate from the Eastern Virginia Conference to the General Convention, which met at Morrisville, in Wake County, N. C. He was endorsed as editor of The Christian Sun.

At the Eastern Virginia Conference at Bethlehem, in Nansemond County, in 1882, he served on the committee on order of business. With this Conference he closed his pastorate of the Suffolk Church. He attended also the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Oak Level, in Franklin County, as a fraternal messenger. In 1883, he was chosen president of the Conference at Union, in Southampton Count, Va., and elected to deliver the annual address at the next session at Spring Hill, in Sussex County. In 1884, he was absent from the Conference. He had charge of Berea, in Nansemond County, Va., and of New Providence and Shallow Well, in the bounds of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference. At this time he was residing in Greensboro, N. C. In 1886 he attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at New Providence and was invited to a seat as a deliberative member from the Eastern Virginia Conference. Likewise, he attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at New Elam, in Chatham County, in 1887, as a fraternal messenger from the Eastern Virginia Conference. He was now editor of the North Carolina Prohibitionist, published at Greensboro. In 1888 he received the nomination for Governor on the Prohibition ticket, and it is generally conceded that he made one of the strongest and most brilliant canvasses the State had known in many years.

At the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Youngsville, in 1888, he was invited to a seat as a deliberative member. In 1889 he was called to the Christian Church at Burlington, which he served one year as pastor. In 1890 he delivered the annual sermon at Graham College, which was well received.

During the last two or three years of his life, he spent the major part of his time on his farm for the purpose of regaining his health. He retired from pastoral work. But before his retirement he was an active worker, an earnest and eloquent preacher, a strong and ready debater, firm and true to his convictions, and to every obligation he assumed.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

Christian education occupies a large place in the religious world today. Some of the best minds in the field of both religion and education are giving their most careful thought to the problems of religious education. We might ask ourselves what is the purpose of religious education? It is to train Christians—to give them that training that will develop the highest type of Christian character, and fit them for a place of largest usefulness in the world of which they are a part.

We would not attempt to enter into a discussion of methods and curricula. But it is our purpose to consider the results that Christian education should be expected to produce in the life of the individual. We will leave methods of training, and selection of subject-matter to be presented to those who are better versed in such questions. What ought Christian education to accomplish?

It is our conviction that first of all Christian education should teach and develop self-mastery. The biggest problem that any person ever has to face is the problem of self. It matters little how much one may have learned until he has learned to master himself he has not been prepared to really undertake the task of life. How many of us have really learned this first lesson? Are we perfectly sure that no matter what may be the temptations that assail us; no matter what may be the circumstances that surround us; no matter what may be the attitude or course of action taken by those with whom we are working—that we are going to be the master of ourselves? Men need to be sure of one thing at least—that if all things are beyond their control, they will be able to control themselves.

Such self-mastery means that we must some day learn to control our passions. Until man is master of his passions, he has but slight advantage over the mere animal creation. For they are in the main controlled by passion. Then, too, men must learn to control their appetites. Not appetite, but reason, is our strong advantage. Likewise, we are never fitted for all good works until we have learned to control our tongues. If you have never done so, you will find it interesting to find how much the Bible has to say about controlling one's tongue. You will certainly find that it is written large among the Christian virtues. Then there is the mastery of our prejudices that is a part of our task. We would be surprised to know how much of our activity is controlled by purely unreasonable prejudice. Then there is the self-mastery that enables one to set himself to a worthy task and stick to it in the face of all obstacles and difficulties until the task is accomplished. Many of us think we have mastered self when we have learned to control ourselves, when we can restrain ourselves from displays of temper, and manage our tongues, and regulate our actions by the standards of good manners. These are small things compared with the self-mastery that enables you to put yourself to work and keep yourself at the task until it is completed, even though others may be laughing at you, those who started out as your helpers may have forsaken you, or may even be opposing you. Christian education will have justified itself to even a larger place than it now occupies if it can only teach this first lesson of self-control.

But Christian education, like Christianity itself, is largely a matter of relationships. And the problem that faces Christian educators is that of teaching and developing the right relationships. And first of all, is the right relationship towards God. This has long been recognized as the chief aim of religion. It is the heart and core of all religion. Upon it depends all the other things that Christian education is striving to accomplish. But have we yet learned the fullness of that perfect relationship towards God? And certainly there are few who would say that we have learned how to bring even a small percentage of those who come under our teaching into that perfect relationship towards God. This must ever remain the chief goal towards which we are striving in Christian education.

We are also confronted with the task of training in, and leading men into, right relationships toward others. There has been for a long time, and still exists in the minds of many, the belief that if a man can be led into a right relationship towards God that he will immediately and automatically fall into right relationships toward his fellow-man. It is true that the right relationship of a man toward God will do more than anything else to bring him into right relationships toward his fellow-man. But I am persuaded that we have greatly underestimated the time, and effort, and training that is required to bring men into right relationships, the one to the other. It is distinctly an educational process. And education is always gradual, laborious, and exacting. Examine the words of Jesus that are recorded for us and see how much of His message, and how much time and effort He expended in training the disciples in right relations towards others. Nor did He finish the task while He was on earth. Nor did the coming of the power of the Holy Spirit accomplish the task instantly. But several years of the most active ministry of the apostles had passed before they realized that their relationship toward others even included the Gentile world. Let us keep before us the fact that the task of Christian education is not complete until we have led men into right relations toward others. And let us be duly mindful of the time, effort, and patience that it will require, lest we be too easily and too quickly discouraged.

Nor will our task be complete until we have led, instructed, and developed men and women in the right relationship towards things. A man's religion has to do not only with himself, his God, and his fellow-man; but it has to do with his attitude toward, and his use of, this material world. The Christian ideal is that the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of His Christ. And that ideals can never be fulfilled until men have been brought into right relationships towards the things of this material world. It may be objected that this ideal has to do with the millennium. But examine every detail of prophecy concerning the millennium, and you will find it is also an ideal of individual perfection in spiritual development. Somehow, a way must be found to educate men and women in the right relationships towards the things of this world. Much of our spiritual service depends upon our use of material things. Much of our happiness and peace also depends upon our relationship toward things. Our Christian education will not be complete until we have brought men into right relationship towards things.

Such are the high hopes we have for religion when our people are really given Christian education. High hopes, we say; but can we really call it Christian education unless it furnishes these four basic things to those who have the advantage of it? We must remember the last three are arranged in the order of their natural development, and are not grouped according to the principle of climax. Christian educators, we are looking to you to give us young men and women who have learned self-mastery, who have entered into the right relationship toward God, who are living in right relationships toward others, and who have learned the spiritual use of material things.

PLACE OF EDUCATION IN EVANGELISM.

By Rev. Clarence Defur, D. D.,
Director of Christian Education of the Central Christian Convention.

In describing the place of education in evangelism, it is hardly necessary to define these terms when addressing a Christian audience, but rather to assume that conceptions are sufficiently clear to arrive at proper conclusions. All acknowledge that the objective in real evangelistic effort is to win souls to definite surrender to Jesus Christ. This act must involve some knowledge, and ability to act upon it. Education includes this knowledge and all other, carrying with its acquisition the development of power.

The time was when each community was a little world to itself, and its own environment of good or evil was all that need be considered in securing converts and maintaining the work of the Church. There was not, under those circumstances, as wide a range of direct influences for the agencies of sin or righteousness as under present-day conditions. Because of these facts, temptations seem greater today than formerly. It is evident, however, that the evils of life are not greater nor is man more depraved, but rather the impact is made more possible all along the line. This is true of both sets of forces—the evil and the good, making it necessary in Christian work to be acquainted with the present order. Success in secular business takes into account this present-day life and operates along intensive lines, so-called, in order to accomplish the desired results. Such new methods do not result from chance, but from most careful study and thought in relation to every possible phase of subjects touching the business in hand. Enlarging at length on this description, beyond what we are able to do here, we may properly refer to such acquisition of business knowledge as education, and to it as necessary in order to secure the best possible results.

Religion, being a permeating force, affecting every possible experience and expression of life, in both the individual and collective sense, requires, for its most perfect manifestation, the most perfect knowledge and power possible, which is education. As has been mentioned above, this is more especially true today than in any previous age within our knowledge, because of the impact of evil along the whole line of life. It becomes especially necessary in view of these facts to stress education as connected with evangelism as has not been done heretofore. Far down in the human heart, the same inherent tenderness exists as has ever been there; our youth are as sensitive to the appeals of the Spirit as those of any age, but the forces of worldliness and evil begin earlier to make their impression upon the child's life; also a general knowledge has come which prompts conservatism in action and the prospect yields, just as in other ages, along the line of least resistance. The obstacles barring the contact of the Spirit must be removed, and this can be done through the processes of education—acquired in life's experiences or academically, and it is so much easier and so much more certain under the supervision of experienced instructors.

Education, as related to evangelism, is not wholly confined to the professional school or college room, but may be acquired anywhere under proper supervision. The greatest advantage lies with those who have enjoyed the widest range of privilege, yet there may be many exceptions to the rule, and so-called educated persons may be the greatest sinners and the most difficult to move towards Christ. With the benefits of education, the average person is easier moved to accept and remain faithful to Christ than is the uneducated person—this act of conversion belongs to the processes of education in the broadest sense.

It may be truthfully said that the evangelist of today must plan every campaign with a knowledge of psychology and of the pull of commercialized amusement; he should also take into account the place that business and society have in the thinking of the people. Then, it is a definite loss not to realize that the influence of the accepted scientific teachings of development operate powerfully in the attitude men hold towards sin and righteousness. Whatever the preacher's view of man's relation to sin and punishment may be, he should be wise enough to know that the education in public school and college has directed the people's thinking along certain grooves that in a very direct way affects their understanding of the love of God and the nature of repentance and salvation. The appeal of the Christ is always the same, but the means of understanding and accepting that appeal varies with the environment of the life and thinking of the age. It becomes necessary, then, that the evangelist must have an intelligent knowledge of the elements with which he deals. To have this, he must be educated. All men are not scholarly alike; education is not marked by a tangible limitation—a visible boundary line—so no one should say that an evangelist is prepared only after he has attained certain grades or degrees. But, after all has been said, there is a definite place for education in the life and program of every evangelist.

What we have said about the evangelist is not to be construed to mean the professional alone, but rather do we refer to the laborer for souls. Primarily, the pastor is the key-man to secure converts in a Church, whether there be an evangelist employed or not. In a very true way, every Christian is an evangelist, for the very nature of his conversion requires that he be a promoter of the religion which he has accepted—he should be an evangelist. Therefore, every Christian should be, not only informed along the lines suggested above, but he should be as really educated as conditions in his life may permit. At the time of launching a program for evangelistic effort, it is expected that every Church member relate himself to the definite task of leading souls to Christ according to the most intelligent way known; he should be willing to enter a school for evangelistic training in his own local Church. A splendid thing would be for each worker to have received special training in one of our colleges for definite religious educational work. Should workers not have had the opportunity of college training, advantage should be taken of every institute or retreat possible for special instruction.

There is a very real and practical place in every evangelistic program for educational work. The education is not evangelism, but is the acquisition of power for carrying on the evangelistic work. Although education is of exceedingly great importance, yet leading souls to Jesus Christ is greater. Because of failure to correctly relate education and evangelism, many persons improperly value the two. Education should be a means to an end; evangelism is an end, but dependent upon education for its highest attainment.

HOME AND CHRISTIAN EDUCATION.

By Rev. Rosa Roemer,
Director of Christian Education of the Metropolitan Christian Convention.

"Where we love is home; home that our feet may leave, but not our hearts."—Holmes.

The greatest thing in the world is love. God is love. These few words help us to realize very clearly the deeper meaning of the word home. It embodies all that is purest and best. Coming to us from the Anglo-Saxon, it denoted originally a dwelling, but came to mean an endeared dwelling as the scene of domestic love, and happy and cherished family life—a sense to which there is an increasing tendency to restrict the word.

"Home's not merely four square walls,
Though hung with pictures richly gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
And filled with shrines the heart has builded."

These lines couple the word home with even a more beautiful meaning foreshadowing our heavenly home.

The influence of the home life is one of the determining factors in every child's life. It used to be the policy of our ancestors to endeavor to make their children feel that home was the happiest place in the world, and Washington Irving, in commenting on the policy, said that he valued this home feeling as one of the choicest gifts a parent can bestow.

Christian education in a Christian home has a similar policy—that of making children feel that the Christian life is the happiest life imaginable.

We realize with deep sorrow that many, many of our present-day homes have failed entirely in having even a slight influence for good on the life of their children. Ample proof of this truthful statement is given in the appalling numbers of spiritual illiterates listed on our statistical records. The figures given are not thousands, but millions, under twenty-five years of age!

The attitude of the home toward God, His will and His way, will be promptly reflected in the mind of the child, and as the saying is, "The child is father to the man," so that we see at once where the main responsibility lies in the training of our children. The task of Christian education is that of presenting Jesus Christ as the Lord and Master of all human relationships. What a challenging task!

The home is, without question, the proper place to lay the foundation of Christian education. Education through "the eye-gate and ear-gate" is the ideal one for those of tender years, and we find the life in the Christian home exemplifies this method in its truest form.

Our leaders in Christian education have great responsibilities, as we are told by those who know, that the neglect of religious matters for five preceding generations is responsible for the present deplorable condition, and it means heroic measures are needful to bring the people in general back to God and home.

Those of us who have this matter on our hearts know that there is nothing in this that can buy the cherished memories of our Christian home-life, nothing of the world's vainglories that seems of any value when compared to the sweet and hallowed memory of our Christian home. The program that our leaders in Christian education have mapped out for us is not only applicable to building on new foundation of home-life, but also has all ways and means outlined to restore broken-down home-life. It is adaptable to all conditions of life, whether it be the humble home of the laboring man or the palatial home of wealth. It is replete with all that is holiest and best. The spiritual factor is emphasized, as is also the fact that all Christian homes are educational institutions, the vision of which comes to consecrated parents on their knees.

Daily individual Bible reading and prayer is the first requisite of the Christian home; grace at meals, the family worship, Christian nurture and discipline are the main pillars of support and strength of all home-life. Without these, you will not make any lasting impression on the hearts of your children.

Every home has its special problems, but these are easily solved in the light of God's word. Trials met with Christian fortitude, conversation always pure and free from malice or harsh judgments, social life that uplifts and enriches the life of friend and neighbor are possible through knowledge of Him.

Father, mother, do you realize your wondrous privilege? That of influencing and starting aright throughout the ages of eternity the soul of the child the Heavenly Father has entrusted to you. "The law of the Lord is perfect," and the first step is perfect obedience to His law if we want His will done on earth as it is done in heaven. Every phase of home-life has its lasting influence, whether it be mental, physical, social or spiritual, and when we as parents realize this more fully, we will devote more of our energy to developing all sides of the nature of our children. As the sunrise dispels the gloom of night, so the influence of the Son of Righteousness will radiate through the Christian home and dispel the gloom that the darkness of sin is casting over our land, and its glorious reflection will shine on and down the stream of life, flowing through the coming ages.

The aim and purpose of our Christian Education Department is to develop and sustain a unified program of service, commencing with the home and carrying on through childhood days on to youth and adult life, still on to senior service.

All this calls for funds. Our Master said: "The laborer was worthy of his hire." Let us see to it that this great work is not halted for lack of funds. Let November 2d be an important day in our Church calendar, and let our offering to the work of this department be taken by every organization of our Churches on that day. Let us show by the contribution we make to the work of our Christian Education Department that we are in full accord with its aims and purposes.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The twelfth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Convention was held at Holy Neck Christian Church, October 10, 1924. At the roll call, twenty-nine Churches responded. The quiet devotional period was conducted by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. Her quartet—Mrs. Darden, Mrs. Mitchell, Mrs. Philhower, and Mrs. Brinkley—sang after each verse of Scripture by Mrs. Johnson. First, Matt. 1:21, they sang "Jesus, Jesus, Jesus, Sweetest Name I Know"; second, Rom. 10:14, they sang "Everybody Ought to Love Jesus"; third, John 3:16, they sang "John Three-Sixteen," followed by prayer. It was a unique, impressive service.

Mrs. B. D. Jones delivered the welcome address, and Mrs. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, responded. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, the efficient and much-beloved president, delivered a splendid address.

Reports were made by superintendents of districts. Mrs. J. A. Williams, for No. 1, reported collections $558.75; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, for No. 2, $3,223.77; Mrs. Waverly Barrett, for No. 3, $683.79; No. 4, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, $1,133.93, making a total for the year from women's societies, young people, willing workers, and cradle roll, of $5,600.24, though the treasurer's report showed the collections had been $5,809.10, which shows that $208.86 had been paid through the district superintendents reported at the meeting. Berea, Nansemond, First Church, Norfolk, and Franklin were on the honor roll. Mr. W. W. Ballard and Mrs. Dr. Gibson, of Suffolk, sang "Love Divine."

Dr. Atkinson delivered a great address on "Vision, Promise and Prospect." The great congregation enjoyed a sumptuous Holy Neck dinner at the noon hour and social fellowship in the bright October sunshine.

Devotionals by Mrs. N. G. Newman, the pastor's wife. Prayer by Rev. F. C. Lester. Mrs. M. L. Bryant gave a brief but interesting account of her recent trip abroad. She attended the World's Sunday School Convention in Glasgow, Scotland, and then toured Europe. A solo by Mrs. E. Holland added to the enjoyment of the interested congregation. A quartet by Thos. Fley, Mrs. Will Jones, James Jones, and Mrs. Robert Haslett filled out the special musical numbers to the delight of all.

As Mrs. C. H. Rowland now lives in Greensboro, N. C., where her husband is pastor of the First Christian Church, she reluctantly resigned her position as the successful and popular president of the Convention.

A motion passed that the money raised for the China fund and not used, be transferred as a gift from this fund to the General Mission Board, to be used in their discretion.

The financial goal set for the coming year was $6,000, and the apportionment was: to the women, $3,900, and to the young people, $2,100. The goal for membership was 10 per cent increase in all departments.

Papers on different subjects and representing different departments, added to the crowded program and cumulative interest. There was no wasted time, and no lost motion. Women may talk a good deal, but they say something—if the Holy Neck Convention was a good witness.

The following officers were elected: Mrs. M. L. Bryant, president; Mrs. M. J. W. White, vice-president; Mrs. L. W. Stagg, secretary; Mrs. W. V. Leathers, treasurer; Mrs. R. T. Bradford, superintendent young people; Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, superintendent literature; Mrs. W. H. Baker, superintendent cradle roll. Superintendents of young people, by districts: No. 1, Mrs. J. A. Williams; No. 2, Mrs. H. S. Hardcastle; No. 3, Mrs. Waverly Barrett; No. 4, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright.

The committee on resolutions made their report. Our mountain work was presented by Dr. Atkinson, and provision was made to assist financially in that work.

During the rush of exercises, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, the retiring president, was presented with a platinum pin, set with diamond and other stones, a fitting recognition of her service and an expression of appreciation on the part of the Convention.

Liberty Spring Church invited the Convention to be their guest next year. The great day closed by adjournment and benediction by Dr. N. G. Newman, pastor of the Church.

ELON LETTER.

October 22d was the birthday of Dr. W. S. Long. He would have rounded out his eighty-fifth year had he survived to see that day. He passed to his reward on August 4th last.

The college was not in session at the time. It was, therefore, thought best to make his approaching birthday the occasion of the college's memorial service to his memory.

The service was held at 11 A. M., at the regular chapel hour. The student body and faculty members were present and entered heartily into the spirit of the hour and of the man whose memory gave tone and content to the occasion.

Dr. W. S. Alexander read as the Scripture lesson the first psalm one of Dr. Long's favorite passages of Scripture.

Dr. W. P. Lawrence spoke feelingly of Dr. Long's invincible purpose to found an institution for his Church and of his whole-hearted consecration to this high resolve. Such purpose he esteemed to be the guarantee of successful achievement in any worthy enterprise.

Dr. W. C. Wicker spoke of Dr. Long's sacrifices in launching the educational enterprise that is now enshrined in the name Elon.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell pictured him as the inspirer of youth. Young people always felt a new inspiriting for their life choices after an interview with Elon's first president, Bro. Harrell declared.

The undersigned spoke of Dr. Long's great faith—a faith that was active and resistless, to be conquered by no obstacle, however towering or threatening. He illustrated it by Dr. Long's fine optimism in the crisal days following the destruction of the administration building to the construction of which he had given such arduous effort.

Dr. W. S. Alexander then closed the service with an earnest prayer of thanksgiving to God for the life and labors of such a splendid man and leader.

In the course of his remarks, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell voiced the sentiment which has so often been expressed that there should be erected at Elon a memorial in material form to perpetuate the name and memory of Dr. Long. This is a matter that deserves, and no doubt will receive, earnest consideration on the part of the Church and college authorities.

WERE WE ONLY DREAMING?

This should be a notable fall in the history of the Christian Church—and God grant that it may be! The hour is at hand when we are to be known as we know ourselves. Let us be true; let us be faithful.

Could the Church at large have been assembled in that memorable missionary meeting in Portsmouth four years ago, the inspiration of that meeting would long since have ripened into a more definite Christian action, and the story today would be the history of our Men and Millions Forward Movement, the supremest undertaking of our denomination. As it stands, the final chapters remain to be written.

The business of the Church is run on business principles; in no less degree should we support all those benevolences which our Church undertakes. Particularly is this true when we have pledged ourselves. Have we forgotten we are only the guardians of our property? In the end, it passes with us, and the part we have had in this great movement is a challenge to us as Christians to meet our Christian obligations.

Four springs we have prepared our soil and sown our grains; kept the wheels of commerce and industry turning. Four summers we have labored under the sweat of honest brows, trusting always to God for sunshine and rain; four autumns we have prepared for the harvest the Lord gave—and now, for a fourth fall, we are gathering into our storehouses and graneries.

Will we sit idly by and see the movement fail? Can Christian people afford to be content? Are we doing our Christian duty? No! And it is not for leadership our Church suffers today. Our people are failing to follow—therein lies the secret, and we need now to awaken. I am glad a personal appeal will be made to individual subscribers. The great problem has been to reach the Christian people who so generously responded. Let us meet these missionaries of the movement joyfully; meet them as Christians, and let them know where we stand. It has been said, "the evil men do lives after them," and certainly our failure to meet our obligations to God reflects no good. Can a Christian Church and a Christian people accept such a rebuke in this hour? Can we? Will we? The answer rests with the membership.

Let us be aroused and make this the memorable fall it should be—the fall in which we make good our pledges to God and His Church. The movement is not a dream—it is more. It is a reality; a vision of our beloved Christian Church taking her stand among the sisterhood of denominations in one supreme stroke for world-wide benevolence and for the extension of His kingdom.

God help us to write the final chapters as we pledged ourselves to do.

DEATHS BY ACCIDENTS.

News that 111 persons have been killed in automobile accidents in North Carolina in six months has startled the people, and those responsible for the public safety are busy studying ways and means for reducing the useless slaughter. The stop law does not stop it.

To die in a sudden and spectacular manner is always startling because of its very unexpectedness. Deaths from automobile accidents are not altogether preventable, but there were over 1,000 deaths in North Carolina that were wholly preventable. We have heard very little about these 1,000, and comparatively little is being done to save the 1,000 who will die in the next six months. They are not dying spectacularly. They are dying slowly, but none the less surely, from a disease that is less excusable than the automobile accidents. And, in addition to the number killed, there are over 8,000 made sick every six months by the same disease, the name of which is tuberculosis.

If the deaths and injuries caused by automobile accidents are alarming, those caused by tuberculosis are frightful.

Tuberculosis is caused by negligence, the same as most of the automobile accidents, but unlike them, the victim has a chance to save himself if he can secure proper treatment. Outside the immediate family and the economic loss to the State, no one is injured by a death from an automobile accident, but a victim of tuberculosis is a menace to the whole community unless he has been taught and practices the personal hygiene which is the first instruction given to a patient in a tuberculosis sanatorium. It is time we were saving these lives and the sixteen million dollar economic loss caused by tuberculosis each year.—N. C. Tuberculosis Association.

MRS. SWEET POTATO WEEVIL THRIVES.

Yesterday afternoon I was knocking around, getting a few news items here and there. There has been so much doing in Bugville lately that I haven't had to hustle much for stories. So I had lain down in the shade of a sweet potato leaf for a rest. Just as I was dozing off into a nap, one of the lady inhabitants of Bugville came hurrying out of a crack in the ground and started up a sweet potato stem. She had blue wing covers, and wore a red waist.

"Good evening, Miss Aphasia," I began. And then I saw my mistake. "O, I beg your pardon, Mrs. Sweet Potato Weevil. You looked so much like Miss Ant that I really took you for her. It's been so long since I saw you that I didn't recognize you at first. Where have you been since that bug dance last fall?"

"Oh, during the winter, you mean? Why, the next day after that dance, those farmer men came and hauled our sweet potatoes to the bin, and us with them. And such a time as we've had! It was a little chilly there when winter came, but still warm enough for the babies to grow. And some new little fellows hatched out besides."

"But we've had the best time this spring," she continued. "The other folks that didn't get to the bin last fall had to stay out in the field, and this spring there wasn't anything left that they could eat but morning glories. They all came near starving, too, when the farmer on that side of the fence hoed the morning glories out. But he left one, and a few of them managed to get through on that until sweet potatoes were set out.

"But we weevils that got to the bin have just had the best time. We got out in the hotbed with the sweet potatoes, and then they carried us out here when they set out the plants. Never tried to kill us by dipping the slips at all. And we had just such nice hard soil that cracks, so it is easy for us to go down to the potatoes. Believe me, I don't want any of this sandy soil for mine."

"Oh, yes," she answered; "everything is lovely. I have a large family, and expect to raise most of them. This farmer didn't bother us in the bin in the winter, nor in the hotbed this spring. And I don't expect he'll be particular either, to spray lead arsenate on these plants to kill us, like the one across the road is doing. Yes, I have 306 babies down in this sweet potato hill, and I expect them all to grow into nice, big sweet potato weevils like their papa and mamma. And I guess, altogether, we sweet potato weevils can hit the farmers along the Gulf for another $3,000,000 this year. But I guess now I'd better be going to look after those kiddies."

And she slid back through the earth crack to the sweet potatoes below.—Progressive Farmer.

EASTERN N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference will meet this year at Pleasant Union, Harnett County, Tuesday, November 18th, at 10 A. M., and will continue in session for three days.

All Churches are urgently requested to send a full delegation and to meet all their apportionments in full, if possible. Delegates and reports should be in Conference at the opening session, so that officers and committees may be enabled to complete their work on time. It is hoped that all delegates and ministers will be present at the opening of Conference and continue in attendance until the close. We need their assistance in working out the plans of the Church for the State, and they need the information concerning what is undertaken, that they may carry reports back to their respective Churches. This is the only method by which we can do efficient work and develop the cause of the Church in the most successful manner.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. WICKER, President.

CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE.

"Upon the first day of rest, let every one of you lay by him in store as God has prospered him, that there be no gathering when I come."—1 Cor. 16:2.

The Jewish converts at Jerusalem were in great need. The Church was in straitened circumstances, and the apostle directs the Church at Corinth to do away with this difficulty by special contributions. Every member of this Church at Corinth, young and old, rich and poor, was requested to contribute something, for their personal contributions would not only help the needy at Jerusalem, but each contributor would thereby help himself.

It is a law of Christian benevolence that action and reaction are equal. He who helps, determines the degree of helpfulness that comes to himself. The apostle said: "He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully." Every man, according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, as by necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver.

Every sacrifice that we make according to the divine plan soon returns to enrich and bless us a hundredfold. It is a grave mistake to deprive any one of the blessings that would come to him as a result of his offerings by simply neglecting to request him to give. The dollars that a Christian man puts into the cause for Christ stands for honest toil, fair dealing, talent, industry and nobility of character. They represent the manly, independent, genuine side of human life. God has made this world on the plan of cheerful giving. The sun is so bright simply because it is always giving away its light, and so glorious because it is scattering its beams on all sides. Even the moon, what she receives from the sun, she gives it again to the earth. Yon twinkling stars, their brightness and radiance consists in their giving. Take the earth; what is its excellence but what it gives?"

Thousands of years ago, vast forests waved in the sunlight and gave themselves to die to furnish vast fields of coal for future use. There is not a tree but is giving of itself perpetually. There is not a flower blooms but its sweetness lies in its shedding its fragrance. All the rivers run into the sea, the sea feeds the clouds, the clouds empty their treasure upon the earth, the earth gives back the rain in fertility, so it is an endless chain of giving generosity. There is nothing in this world but lives by giving except a covetous man, and such a man is a piece of grit in the machinery of Providence. He is out of date, out of God's order of things. Jesus said: "Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

It is a historical fact that Churches, however strong numerically, which have endeavored to perpetuate their existence by the use of means which have come to them through channels which did not necessitate a sacrifice on the part of their individual membership, are today either numbered with the have-beens or doomed with a sickly life and a premature death.

Paying is just as essential as praying, and both are to be considered by the Christian as indispensable requisites in character-building. There can be no growth in the knowledge of spiritual things without sacrifice. Every heavenly stride that the Christian makes, necessitates the sacrifice of some worldly ambition or selfish desire. There can be no change in our present relationship to the things of this world. It is only as we let go our treasures, for Christ's sake, that we are able to lay hold with a living faith and appropriate to ourselves the very best things God has in store for us. Putting on Christ, necessitates first putting off something for Christ Giving on the part of Christians enters so largely into the process of character-building that the first day of the week is selected by the apostle as the time the most appropriate for these offerings to be made.

The apostle had planned to visit the Church at Corinth, and why not wait until he came and preached a stirring sermon and raise the needed amount at one collection? It would be just as reasonable to ask why not dispense with all religious service except one big meeting each year.

Christian character is of slow growth and gradual process in building, and the membership of the Church at Corinth needed this weekly offering as a means in building their character. If our giving for the cause of Christ were so systematized as to lay aside each Sunday as God had prospered us, we would not only reap larger results from public worship on the Sunday, but the Church treasury would never be wanting for funds to carry forward the Master's work. God's plan is for each member to give, and to give upon the first day of each week, and to give as God has prospered him. Such a systematic way of directing the Church's finance would lead to our recounting all our commercial gains as divine blessings. Just how much of this weekly increase is to be given to the Lord, the apostle does not direct, but this is left to the abounding zeal of loving hearts to determine. Need and opportunity to give, on the one side, and our financial ability to help supply that need, are the extent of our weekly offering to help spread the gospel.

Weekly offerings lead to the habit of thoughtfulness in God's work. This would remind us that we hold in our possession something that belongs to God. It would teach us self-denial, which is one of the essentials of true discipleship.

"If any man," said Jesus, "would be my disciple, let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow me."

THE BENEVOLENCES.

Reports are current that the great benevolent claims of the Conferences are suffering unusually this year. One annual Conference in a rich territory collected only 55 per cent of the assessments, and another 58.

It is little comfort to know that heavy deficits are appearing in the tabulations of other denominations. The following is from Zion's Herald: "Very discouraging reports as to benevolent giving are being received from the fall Conferences. So far as we have heard, every Conference thus far held has shown a decided decrease in the total amount raised for world service as compared with the sum contributed for these same causes last year. In the West Ohio Conference, for example, this year's total is $302,455, a loss of $115,578, or more than 25 per cent, over the previous year, when the total was $418,033."

Do our ministers and members know how seriously the Church will be crippled in its effort to give the gospel to a lost world if such returns as these continue to come in? Every means of raising full assessments should be employed in sections where the Conferences have not been held.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

NOTICE.

To the Pastors, Sunday School Superintendents and Christian Endeavor Presidents of the Southern Christian Convention:

At the last session of the Southern Christian Convention, a resolution was passed authorizing the Board of Religious Education to take an offering for the work of the Board of Christian Education of the General Convention of the Christian Church. This offering is to be taken November 2d of this year.

There are a few facts that are perhaps not generally known to the rank and file of our Church to which I wish to call your attention in connection with this offering.

This board has a force of four full-time field and office workers, who are as much at our command for their services as for any other section of the Church. Three of them—Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Miss Lucy Eldredge, and Rev. W. P. Fletcher—spent considerable time in the Southern Convention during the past year, and Mrs. Fred Bullock a short time. The total work done for the Southern Convention for the year, including the scholarships given to Elon men, was approximately $3,000.

The board spends $5,000 per year for scholarships for ministerial students and those preparing for foreign missionary service. The South gets her full share of these.

Our denominational contributions to the interdenominational educational, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor movements come through this board.

The total annual budget of the board is $40,000. The South has approximately one-fourth the membership of the Christian Church, but since $20,000 of the budget is for Defiance and Palmer Colleges, and owing to the fact that the Southern Convention owns and supports Elon and Bethlehem Colleges, we are not asked to contribute to the college part of the budget, but to raise one-fourth of the budget for office and field workers, scholarships and interdenominational co-operation. This makes our share of the budget $5,000, and since we have been receiving the benefits without making the contributions in the past,

I feel that in this our first general offering for the work, we should raise the full amount if possible.

Envelopes will be mailed to your school for the offering. We hope to see it taken in every Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. Mail your contribution to Mr. C. H. Stephenson, treasurer of the Board of Religious Education, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C.

Yours for a liberal offering,

W. T. WALTERS,

Chairman Board of Religious Education.

NOTICE.

All Churches of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, please take notice that the next session of the above Conference will meet at Apples Chapel Church November 11, 12, 13, 1924, and you are asked to please elect your delegates at your earliest convenience and send their names and how they expect to come to D. E. Michael, McLeansville, N. C.

Those who care to, can reach the Church by auto, it being on a sand-clay road, between Gibsonville and Reidsville, and those who come by train will be met at Brown Summit and Gibsonville. See that your Church is represented, for a cordial welcome awaits you.

C. E. GERRINGER, Pastor.

NOTICE TO DELEGATES.

Delegates to the Western North Carolina Conference who expect to come by way of Millboro should notify me. Other delegates will be met at Randleman station. C. F. SWANEY, Secretary.

OUR PLEDGES
Men and Millions Sacred, Solemn and Binding.

These obligations were made through the Church to the Kingdom of God and to all that pertains to building up that Kingdom in the world, so far as our Christian Church is concerned. As Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., has so pertinently pointed out: "A Christian can no more drop his pledges than he can drop his prayers or his Church membership. Misfortune may make it impossible to meet financial obligations--'When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both' (Luke 7:42)--but not till 'they had nothing to pay.' Obligations to God are as binding as obligations to men, and God will help those who try to keep their pledges."

Many are making great sacrifices to meet these obligations and pay these pledges. Is your Church on this list? If not, let's do our best to get it there. If there, let's get it in first place.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

DO NOT WASTE TIME DWELLING ON "WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN."

At times when you look at your life partner, do you wish he or she were different? Do you have some one in mind whom you wish your betterhalf resembled in habits, form or manner? But do you stop to think that every human being has faults?

Perhaps the person you wish your helpmate were like has many disagreeable traits which would be more annoying to you than those of your life companion.

You might be deceived by that ready smile or that well-groomed appearance. In and about the house that person may be ill-tempered and slovenly. The cheerfulness you are so attracted by might turn out to be a mere pretense. Most persons keep up an appearance of good humor, and few have as much genuine good temper as they would lead others to think.

Too many look upon the home as a place to give vent to their ill-temper.

You should consider yourself fortunate if you have a companionable team-mate, and not be foolishly dwelling upon what "might have been" had your choice been otherwise. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

TUESDAY.

LIFE'S TRAGEDY AND ITS CURE.

"Surely He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows."—Isa. 53:4-6.

Bright, beautiful and joyous as is life, yet it ever hides a tragedy. Sin, a bitter seed, rankles within it. Sorrow will blight its joy. Sooner or later, death will eclipse it.

With the Jew, this tragic view of life took a moral form. With their great characters, sin was the specter that darkened life. It was the soul that felt the deadly wound. Estrangement from God, the sense of His displeasure, and spiritual death, made the far more awful tragedy for the Jew.

But this despair of His children moved the heart of the universal Father. The tragedy was too deep for human remedy, and so He sent His divine Son to the rescue. The guilt was too foul for mortal to cleanse. and so He gave His only begotten to the cross, that from His blood should issue a fountain of cleansing and "healing for the nations." Death was too mighty a foe for man to overcome, and so the Lord Jesus Christ descended to the conqueror's dark empire, wrested from him his scepter, and rising triumphant proclaimed to the ransomed sons of men: "I am the resurrection and the life!"

Thus is the nameless tragedy that veiled the world turned into joy, victory and endless life. Sin's burden is removed from the conscience; sorrow banished from the heart; fear supplanted by hope, and "death swallowed up of life." This is the evangelical of the atonement.

And for us, it but remains to rejoice in the measureless love that turned life's hopeless tragedy into joy, and to devote our ransomed lives to the willing service of Him who suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God.—Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

Prayer.—The Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

REPENTANCE.

Lesson: 2 Cor. 7.

"Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of."—V. 10.

In modern days the grace of penitence and the virtue of humility have receded into the background of our thinking. We like to think ourselves strong, and sin a delusion and sorrow a waste of time and effort. But we forget that we cannot put sin out of business by ignoring its existence, when its vile work is all about us and in our own hearts and lives.

The pity of the modern neglect of this great requirement of the faith is that it is so much more vital and enlarging than is often recognized. The word in the Greek means "a change of mind." That is enlightening as to what repentance ought to do. It ought to change our minds, our outlook on life, our motives and pursuits; in short, make different men and women of us. How far from this is our usual thought of repentance! Often what we call repentance is only remorse for the consequences our sins have brought upon us. The remembrance of the sin is not grievous, but its result is troublesome. We must get to the point where we are sincerely sorry for the sowing rather than troubled about the crop. David is the true example for all penitents when he cries, "Against Thee, Thee only, have I sinned and done this evil in Thy sight." He felt the eyes of the Almighty sear his sinful soul.

Sorrow like this produces true repentance and leads to genuine salvation. It is the primary requirement of the new and deeper life. Godly sorrow, sorrow unto men and God for what we have done amiss, and for the opportunities of good we have missed in a needy world—this is what we require to break our hearts and plow them for the seed of the Spirit. Such sorrow and repentance will bring no regret. Rather there will come relief and heart-cleansing. While the heart is bold and unbroken, sin will hold sway. Our only possible disposition is expressed in the cry of the great Santa Teresa, when after a lifetime of reform and striving for the kingdom she lies dying, and says, "A broken and a contrite heart, O Lord, Thou wilt not despise."—Rev H. D. Ranns.

THURSDAY.

THE SOWER AND THE SOIL.

"Behold, there went out a sower to sow."—Mark 4:3.

Emphasis in the parable of the sower needs to be placed upon the soil. The sower is one, the seed is one and his work and purpose one; but the ground is different. If there was an equal amount of land of the four kinds of soil, then three-fourths of the sower's time, work and seed were lost. The trouble with the first soil was from without. It had been made hard by outside influences. It would have responded to the sower's work if it had been well broken up. The difficulty with the second kind was from within. It, too, might have yielded increase if a sufficient amount of dynamite had been used. The trouble with the third kind of soil was both inward and outward. Bad seed had come from without and had grown from within, and the good seed of the sower was choked out. Proper preparation of this ground would have been rewarded by a large yield. As every one who hears the gospel is represented by one of the four kinds of soil, it is very necessary that we take heed how we hear.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for the good seed, and we cry unto Thee for help, that our minds and hearts may be sufficiently prepared to receive it. Amen.—T. E. White.

FRIDAY.

TRUE VALUES.

"A man's life consisteth not in the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

"A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold."—Prov. 22:1.

"Riches profit not in the day of wrath; but righteousness delivereth from death."—Prov. 11:24.

"He that trusteth in riches shall fall, but the righteous shall flourish as a green leaf."—Prov. 11:28.

Everybody faces the problem of riches and poverty. Some are enormously rich and abjectly poor. Others are abjectly poor and enormously rich. Our estimate of things usually is based upon material possessions, honors, power of influence, but we learn that too often folks of this class have none of the inner signs of the finer qualities of manhood.

Science discovers deadly gases, and it is used in preparation for war to make it easier to destroy everybody instead of making the tasks of life easier. Power of influence is used to break down Sabbath observance instead of setting forth the true values of the day. Something is fundamentally wrong, and that wrong is, the loss of the sense of true values. We are dealing with superficialities, running after money, honors, and things that hang on the chest and make lions of us, when, instead, we need the power of self-control, we need the capacity to spend the Sabbath with ourselves profitably; we need character true and strong; we need God; we need predominant spiritual life. We need to go to the Church on Sunday and affirm the fact of the human family and universal brotherhood and then carry that idea with us in our practices and dealings with men during the week. It is a waste of time to get in a Sunday frame of mind if it is not to be applied in every-day life.

Prayer.—Our Father, give us a hungering and thirsting after righteousness, and the courage to believe in and stick to it. Hasten the time when all shall know that the only true values are: moral worth, justice, fair play, honesty, righteousness, and the things of God. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SATURDAY.

FREEDOM FROM SIN.

"If the Son shall set you free, ye shall be free indeed."—Jno. 8:31-36.

In regards to the untoward habits of life, it is quite usual to recognize the sin and then proceed to make excuse for it. For instance, most folks admit the evils of alcoholics, but excuse themselves for using it, until finally the doing of the things diminishes the sense of the sin of it. It is like going into an ill-ventilated room—one almost suffocates at first, but eventually gets used to it and breathes easy. But the poison is there just the same.

Such is the power of habit: participation deadens the sense of its evil effects until one is bound head and foot and cannot break away. Only Christ can break these chains. He came to set men free. He came to make men new—give them new natures, animate them with new motives, inspire obedience to the essential spirit of Christian living, to give them a new world of thought.

"Commit thy way unto the Lord, and He will bring it to pass."

Prayer.—Our Father, forbid that we shall neglect salvation and lose the power of righteousness. Forbid that we shall live separate from Thee and Thy great spirit. Forbid that at last

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Four little children who are now in the county poorhouse appealed to us through one who is very much interested in their future citizenship to give them a place in our Orphanage. You have some idea as to what a home in a county poorhouse means to these little children. I am told these children have strong, healthy bodies, bright minds and if an opportunity is given them they will likely make excellent citizens. The Christian Orphanage will be glad to take and care for these little helpless children if it had funds to support them. This is an opportunity for you to do some charity work. Just a little help from you might mean a teacher, a trained nurse, a lawyer, a doctor, or a President—who knows? Many such appeals come to us, and just a little help from you might enable us to lend a helping hand.

Thanksgiving is approaching rapidly. The Christian Orphanage depends largely on this special offering to carry us through the winter months. We have seventy-five on the waiting list. A little help from each member in our denomination would make it possible for us to not only care for the number we now have, but would help us to take a part of those who are pleading to us for a place. Can we have a little help from each member of your Church and Sunday School and swell our Thanksgiving offering to larger proportions. Oh, just a little help from each member will make our work lighter, the little children's lives brighter and happiness will fill their hearts. Plan a large offering and work your plans and let us all rejoice together.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 9, 1924.

Subject: "The Feeding of the Five Thousand."

Golden Text: "I am the bread of life."—John 6:35.

Lesson: John 6:1-15.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 107:1-9.

Reference Material: Matt. 14:13-21; Mark 6:32-44; Luke 9:10-17; John 6:16-71.

It must have been great to live in Jesus' time. What stirring scenes were enacted wherever the Master went! Life was never dull or drab and commonplace when He was around. He gave it color and adventure wherever He touched it.

Take for example, the story of the feeding of the five thousand. Jesus had taken His disciples to the other side of the sea of Galilee after a strenuous campaign on their part as well as His. He wanted them to have some rest and an opportunity to compare notes after their first missionary tour. And they withdrew to the "desert places," a place where He thought they would have solitude and privacy.

But He could not be hid. The Master's teaching and healing and, most of all, His personality, had caught the imagination of the people and a great multitude followed him. John intimates that it was curiosity which led them to follow Him. But that did not make any difference to Jesus, for Luke says "He welcomed them, and spake to them of the kingdom of God, and them that were in need of healing, He healed." Jesus capitalized the instainct of curiosity. He knew that those who came from mere curiosity, as well as "fools who came to scoff," often remained to pray. And He did not consider His own comfort when there was an opportunity to teach or to heal.

He must have told them some interesting things, for they remained with Him even until the close of day. They even forgot they were hungry. But as the day wore away, the disciples became concerned about the crowd, and they suggested that Jesus send the people away, that they might get their supper and arrange for a night's lodging. The disciples said, "Send them away." Jesus said, "They have no need to go away; give ye them to eat." Here is a parable of life; a parable that speaks eloquently of human callousness as compared with divine compassion. And this were a great sin, for inasmuch as we do it not unto the least of these, we do it not unto Him.

Andrew was a great "fisher of men." He "first findeth his own brother, Simon Peter, and brought him to Jesus," and now he finds a "lad" with five barley barley loaves and two small fishes. But what were these among so many? Poor Andrew, like the young man with Elisha, and like many of us today, saw only material things. He did not see the unseen, but very real spiritual forces and resources. Alas! that we cannot see that our meager resources are multiplied and enriched an hundredfold when we bring them to Jesus.

The Master had not only compassion, but common sense. He made the people sit down in companies—all things were to be done decently and in order. He took the food and returned thanks —He knew that the Father was the giver of every good and perfect gift. He gave to the disciples and had them to give to the people—He knew that one of the finest things He could do for men was to have them do something for Him. And He had the disciples gather up the broken pieces that remained—He knew the human and sinful tendency to waste. If the Master walked with His eyes on the heavens, He kept His feet on the ground. There could be no real religion for Him without commonsense.

When we consider the feeding of the five thousand, we are in the realm of mystery. The human mind can hardly see how five barley loaves and two small fishes could be made "to go around" among so many. But the miracle is repeated every year. The farmer who goes out with his bushel of seed and comes in from the harvest with thirty or sixty or an hundredfold is a witness to the miracle of divine multiplication. The one who makes possible the latter may well have made possible the former.

The people wanted to make Jesus king. But the Master did not want to be made king by force. His kingdom is not of this world, and love, not force, is the ultimate principle. He knew the subtle danger of the hour of victory, and He "withdrew again into the mountain alone." The story of the temptation was "continued in the next chapter."

Teaching Points.

1. Curiosity is a legitimate means of leading folks to Christ.
2. People like the "free things" of religion.
3. The Master looks upon the multitudes with compassion.
4. God tempts no man; but He tests men.
5. The forces of the kingdom cannot be reduced to statistics.
6. He reckons in vain who reckons without the divine resources.
7. Anything brought to Jesus is multiplied in value and efficiency.
8. The final authority is not what we say, but what Jesus says.
9. Meager resources have infinite possibilities when consecrated to Christ.
10. It is a great thing to find a man for Christ; it is a greater thing to find a boy for Him.
11. The lad in our midst holds the key to the situation.
12. The progress of the kingdom is held back by pessimism.
13. The divine forces work in an orderly way.
14. He who eats with the Master is filled.
15. The more one gives, the more one has.
16. Waste is sin.
17. When men accept Jesus' way of living, there will be enough for all and to spare.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

November 9, 1924.

Topic: "Stewardship—Our Abilities for Christ."

Lesson Study: Matt. 25:14-30.

The solution for the ills of the world is the yielding of ourselves to the service of Christ. We are God's, and all that we have is God's. We have in the lesson study a beautiful story of how two trusted servants used their Lord's money for the best interest, and we have the sad story of how another, because he had small opportunities, seemingly, quit the job assigned him. When the master returns for his interest, the two former were ready to face him, having done their best with their abilities, and the latter one having failed to use his talent, returned it to his master and confessed his failure. Now, that was a sad time fore the one who had failed. His days had been spent idly, and he knew that he was a failure. He had not only wasted his opportunity, but had not made that which belonged to his master count for anything. When we do not give our talent to Christ, His work suffers and we suffer. We should give ourselves unreservedly, because we belong to Him, and what we have is only entrusted to us by our Creator. The giving of our abilities will involve the giving of our strength and our sympathy in thought, feeling and action. There is no excuse for those who have few talents being "quitters." Christian Endeavorers, as "friends of Christ, friends in Christ, and friends for Christ," must give their abilities to Christ.

THE S. S. AND C. E. HANDBOOK.

The publication of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Handbook has been delayed on account of the failure to get the minutes from two Conventions. We have written repeatedly for them, and hope to get them in time to get the book out within the next few days.

Chairman Board of Religious Education.

OUR MEMBERSHIP OF TOMORROW.

By Rev. James H. Lightbourne,

Regional Director of Christian Education, Southern Christian Convention.

The Church of the living God is doing a great work. We venture this affirmation, confronted by an insistent propaganda of pessimism, by the hostility of a numerous and militant school of prophets and by the widely circulated and glaringly presented newspaper descriptions and portrayals of American crime and American immorality. We dare this claim, despite criticisms from within and charges from without. We even adventure further into the realm of boldness and in the face of apparent and real weaknesses and failures, assert the Church is attempting more and accomplishing more than at any other period of her history.

We do not have space nor time to enter into a presentation of the sources of study nor methods of reasoning which lead us to this conclusion. We do, however, beg to state that it is the result of carefully outlined study and research, and not the mere challenge of a young man's loyalty to the Church of his day.

We now fare forth to more daring. We affirm that, notwithstanding her present greatness in the realms of vision and accomplishment, the Church is not accepting, and therefore not meeting, the challenge of the day as she should. Mingled with our pride is shame; with our boastings, chagrin! We would suggest that the Church of today cannot meet the problems and tasks of the day as they should be met. We offer as a subject for consideration the proposition that the Church is not prepared to meet the situation. In many sections, and in many instances in all sections, the ministry, not to speak of the membership of the Churches, is not prepared. And when we consider the membership of the Churches we are forced to recognize that it is woefully uninformed both as to the situation itself and the high caliber of Christian character and Christian enterprise required by the nature and extent of the task. In this we are neither censuring nor condemning the membership of the Church. It suffers the natural consequences of an incomplete and inadequate program on the part of the Church itself. The emphasis on individual salvation has been so insistently and unwisely emphasized that unexpected and certainly undesired by-products have resulted, and these have fastened themselves upon the membership of the Church subtly but effectively.

When a few years ago a group of Christian men received a vision of the greater task, and therefore the greater responsibility of the Church, and carried it to the official leadership of the denominations, and through them secured the cooperation of the denominations in a mighty forward movement of Christian forces, they were happy in the conviction that the battle was won. Since then, the interdenominational features of that grand undertaking have largely gone into financial and spiritual insolvency, and the denominations are even now wrestling in prayer and faith for an honorable solution of the problems developed by the thousands on thousands of unpaid pledges. We have within the hour returned from hearing an address by the president of the Southern Baptist Convention. In the address, reference was made to the inability of their mission board to finance the careers of ninety young people prepared and ready to sail for the mission fields. We have read and we have listened to many harsh arraignments of our constituencies in relation to the pledges made in those great denominational drives. We have not entered into the spirit of these for the reason that we felt when the drives were made, and we feel now, that the membership was unprepared for the great demands made on it.

We would not overlook here that these financial drives had associated with them educational features of the highest order of Christian polity. In the final summing up of the value of the great movements of 1919, we are confident it will be discovered that the educational phases of the campaigns made by far the greatest and most permanent contribution. Missions, evangelism, devotions and stewardship have been presented to the constituencies of our Churches with greater intelligence than ever before, and with as great fervor. The educational aspects of the forward movement in our own Christian Church were especially given prominence, and it necessarily follows that a rich harvest of better-trained and better-informed memberships of Churches will be reaped.

This leads us to the matter on our heart. On Sunday, November 2d, the Department of Christian Education in the Northern Conventions, and the Board of Religious Education in the Southern Christian Convention, will appeal to the Sunday Schools, the Christian Endeavor Societies and the Churches of our brotherhood for an offering for the support of the work of Christian education. It is in reality an offering for the preparedness of our membership of tomorrow. It is an offering for the development of our educational program, which embraces in its scope the smallest of our Sunday Schools and all of our colleges. It is an offering for the training of boys and girls, and even men and women in the Christian life. What will you do?

At the very beginning of this article, we wrote of an unprepared membership. We did so advisedly. We believe we are warrented in using such an expression. We believe we are supported by facts and results. We realize only too well that we were unprepared. The presentation of the world's needs and of our responsibility, of the tremendousness of the opportunity and of the necessity of immediate and heroic action broke upon us like the bursting of a shell in a quiet woods retreat, and we were swept off our feet, as it were, by our enthusiasm. And then followed slowly the realization that we were not prepared for the great obligation we had assumed. This does not mean that we, in any sense or particular, feel released from the financial pledges then made. And it does mean that we feel it more than ever incumbent on us to use every legitimate means and method at our disposal to provide training for our boys and girls which will equip them for the even greater tasks and responsibilities of the Church member of tomorrow.

It is a great field of service. And, oh! how large a field. And the responsibility that is ours is increased a thousandfold by the coming into the Church of hundreds on hundreds of boys and girls. What will you do?

We are very proud of the little we have been able to do in this great work. This article goes from our study with the prayer and hope that it will lend its mite toward the increasing of the offering on November 2d.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN LEADERSHIP TRAINING.

By Rev. Arthur A. Richards,

Director of Christian Education New England Christian Convention.

Only a few years ago, the writer heard Dr. Omer S. Thomas, of Dayton, Ohio, state in an address given at the Western Christian Convention, assembled in Albany, Missouri, that "Leadership is the biggest word in the English language." And more and more I am convinced that the statement is true. Perhaps there are more sentimental and more religious terms that we emphasize over and over again, but the word which holds the "master-key" which will unlock the doors in every field of modern life is "leadership." In every field, eyes are fixed upon the leaders. And how much attention is sought in this matter just now in the field of politics. It is no light burden that rests upon the shoulders of the voter as he or she marks the ballot in favor of the persons who are to be the leaders in this fair land.

The ringing of the school bells after an almost solemn silence of several months reminds one, too, that our children are rushing away from homes day after day to have close personal contact with a leadership which represents the field of education. And the local papers are daily mentioning the names of those who have gone or are going to the various colleges and universities which represent the field of higher learning. And here again we are reminded that they are to live in close fellowship with a leadership which will leave its mark upon the face of their souls for life.

Leadership there always has been, and always will be, but the vital element is the kind of leadership. When we survey the field of education and see all the provision that is made that the youth of the land may have the best of schooling, buildings, equipment, athletic fields; in fact, everything in this line that is needed is being fast provided. Instruction given by a teaching staff which has been carefully prepared and trained for a particular work. And yet the most essential and the biggest factor of all is so many times lost sight of entirely. It is that of the kind of leadership.

I am not craving public office, and yet when it comes to choosing the teaching staff in our schools, I often feel that I would like to be a member of every board of education in our land. The biggest class of leaders in the world is that which is composed of the teachers, and the years when they are making their impressions on the lives of youth is that period which so largely determines the whole afterlife. And yet when we read the qualifications of the teaching force which has been engaged for the nine-month period we find no reference to that which every parent should rise up and insist on as being an essential part of a leader's training. We are made aware of the course and the grades, the particular teacher is to have charge of; we are informed of the educational merits of the teacher; we are greeted with the statement that he or she graduated with high honors and the highest degree from the biggest school. But we scan in vain for the statement that would enlighten our minds and lighten our hearts for those other qualifications which the school boards do not always demand.

When will we ever get to that place when we place degrees and grades in their proper place. We must have an educated and highly trained leadership in teaching, but the leaven which is needed in every measure of meal is that of Christian education. I realize, through experience, that our State universities for the most part prohibit Christian education because of the State laws, and also that those same State laws put the ban on religious education (so far as it may be the Christian religion) in our day schools. But laws are not unchangeable, and constitutions are not unamendatory; we must have a training which will insist upon these essentials until they are granted.

My plea is for Christian Education in leadership training, and so long as so many States prohibit religious instruction in State schools and universities, the only places to which we may look for help are the Churches of Christ and the schools and colleges bearing His name.

The Department of Christian Education in our denomination has visioned this great need, and it has outlined a program which is as thoroughgoing and far-reaching as prayer and vision and work can make it. It has made this great need its study, and it stands ready to help every Conference and Church to formulate plans for organizing in the local Churches a department of Christian education.

However, the greatest asset of the denomination in supplying this need is that of our own Christian colleges and schools. These schools were dedicated to the task of supplying our Churches and communities with a Christian-trained leadership, and they are maintained through the sacrifices of a Church constituency which has dedicated its support to this end. May God grant that the future kingdom work which our people will do will show the way to greater sacrifices in support of every kind.

The greatest need today is a Christian-trained leadership and it is our task and our duty and our opportunity to supply the need. Jesus saw it that way, and He carefully chose and trained a leadership for His work. So must it be with His Church, and so must it be with the Christian schools. We need not so much to lift our eyes unto the fields, for we know they are always white unto harvest; but we need to work and to pray, that the Lord of the harvest may have Christian-trained workers to glean the ripening grain.

"To the harvest field away,
For the Master calleth;
There is work for all today,
Ere the darkness falleth,
Swiftly do the moments fly,
Harvest days are going by,
Going, going, going, going by."

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Well, hello there, Little Wide-Awakes!

I am glad you never get sleepy when you read the Korner. That's what some one wrote me—goody! I like my Kiddies in this Korner to write me a lot about themselves. Now, listen, dears: pep up a little wee, tiny bit; sit right down and write me your part of a million—yes, a whole million letters. Will you at once? I want to know what you want next week in the Korner.

Oh-ee! listen: While I was gone, I heard a story. Oh! it's good to read, but it's too long for us all at once, so this is the first part of the story; next week we will read all the rest. Don't forget to tell me how you like this witchy-witchy story when you write to me.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

CHARLEY'S OPINION.

The girls may have their dollies,
Made of china or of wax;
I prefer a little hammer
And a paper full of tacks.

There's such comfort in a chisel!
And such music in a file!
I wish that little pocket-saws
Would get to be the style!

My kite may fly up in the tree,
My sled be stuck in mud,
And all my hopes of digging wells
Be nipped off in the bud.

But with a little box of nails,
A gimlet and a screw,
I'm happier than any king—
I've work enough to do!

THE MOTHER'S PRAYER.

Once there was a good mother, whose chief prayer for her little boy in his cradle was that he might have a loving heart. She did not pray that he might be wise or rich or handsome or happy or learned, or that others might love him, but only that he might love.

When that little boy, whose name was Edward, grew up, it seemed as if his mother's prayer had been answered, and that, in making it, she had been wiser than she knew or dreamed.

She had not prayed that he might be wise; but somehow the love in his heart seemed to make him wise, and to lead him to choose what is best, and to remember all the good things he was taught.

She had not prayed that he might be rich; but it turned out that he was so anxious to help and serve others that he found the only way to do that was to get the means of helping: and so he became diligent, thrifty, and prompt in business, till at last he had the means he sought.

Edward's mother had not prayed that he might be handsome; but there was so much love and good will manifest in his face that people loved to look on it: and its expression made it handsome, for beauty attends love like its shadow.

The prayer had not been that he might be happy; but—dear me! how can there be love in the heart without happiness? Edward had no time for moping discontent, for revenge, or anger. He was too busy thinking what he might do for others; and, in seeking their happiness, he found his own.

But was he learned? Of course, when he found it pleased his parents to have him attend to his studies, he did his best; and though there were many boys quicker and apter than he, yet Edward generally caught up with them at last, for love made him attentive and earnest.

But last of all, though Edward loved others, did others love him? That is the simplest question of all. You must first give love if you would get it. Yes, everybody loved Edward, simply because he loved everybody. And so I advise these little boys and girls who think they are not loved to put themselves the question, "But do you love?"—Emily Carter.

OLD WITCH NEDA.

By Abbie Phillips Walker.

PART I.

Once upon a time—thousands and thousands of years ago, I expect; for no one ever hears of Old Witch Neda in these days—an old witch named Neda used to jump on her broom-stick, with another broom in her hand. She used to fly about the sky, brushing the cobwebs off the sky. What she really did was to brush away the little rain-clouds that the stars used for veils when they were tired of shining.

"You let our veils stay over our faces," said the little stars, quite angry with Old Witch Neda. "We want them. You wicked Old Witch, go away!"

But Old Witch Neda would only laugh a cackling laugh, and go on with her broom, sweeping the cobwebs off the sky.

"Silly little stars," said Old Witch Neda; "they would have the sky in most untidy state if it were not for me. I have to sweep every night. If I didn't, the sky would be full of cobwebs. 'Veils,' indeed! These silly little things don't know the difference in veils and cobwebs."

One night, the stars were all wearing their veils, when along came Old Witch Neda with her broom and whisked them off, and the little stars were so angry that they forgot their nice manners and rushed at Old Witch Neda, darting little sharp points right into her face and making her wink and blink, so that she could not see where she was going—and, oh-oo! she bumped into the Moon, who was just coming out from behind a cloud to see what was going on. "Look out where you are going, Old Witch," called the Moon.

Old Witch dropped her broom and made a grab for the Moon—and she caught him, too, right by the nose.

"Here! here! here! let go my nose!" he cried. But Old Witch did not let go at all. She hung on and carried him off to her house on the top of a high mountain.

"I'll give these silly Stars something to cry about now," she said as she opened a dark closet and threw in the Moon.

"They won't have any moonlight for a while, and if I can get the Sun now, I can have all things my way in the sky and make those silly Stars sorry they were rude to me tonight."

The next day, the Sun was shining, and not thinking a thing about any harm coming to him, Old Neda put on her smoked glasses, and long cape, and high-topped cap. Then she jumped on her broom-stick and flew straight for the Sun. Of course, the stars were asleep and could not warn the Sun, and he thought it was a black cloud sailing towards him.

"Ah, now I can take a little nap," he said; "here comes a black old cloud I can hide under for a while. I do get so sleepy shining all day," and then he gave a yawn and got ready for his nap. But something happened—he didn't know just what, but before he could stop the yawn, he felt a jerk—and then he was covered with something black and whizzed along at a terrible rate of speed to—he did not know where.

"There, I guess I can run things to suit myself for a while," said Old Witch Neda as she took the Sun from under her cape, winking and blinking. Then she threw him into the dark closet with the Moon and closed the door.

Of course, the stars awoke, as it was dark, and it became dark right away when Old Neda stole the Sun; so the little Stars shone and winked all night and all day, too, because the Sun did not come up—and they did not know when the night was over at all.

The next day and the next night they twinkled and shone; then they began to get sleepy.

"I wonder what can be the matter with us," they said; "this is the longest night I ever saw."

"And I wonder where the Moon is," said one little Star, "and why the Sun is so lazy this morning."

Old Witch Neda was flying about laughing at them all this time. "I can tell you where the Sun is and the Moon too," she said. "I have them both locked up in a closet in my house," and off she flew on her broom-stick, leaving the little Stars speechless with amazement.

SUNDAY.

WHAT A CHRISTIAN SHOULD FORGET.

"Forgetting those things which are behind."—Phil. 3:13.

A perfect Christian life is a judicious balance between forgetting and remembering. Experience is a great teacher, and it results from remembrance. Even an animal grows wary of the trap into which it has once fallen and suffered. So our past should warn us of our weakness. It is only the simple who do not learn from temptation and pitfalls.

A study of our experiences also shows us the intervention of a loving Providence. How often we have been graciously delivered! Meditation of bygone incidents strengthens our faith. "Because Thou hast been my help in the past, therefore under the shadow of Thy wings will I rejoice." Yet "forgetting," which the apostle urges here, is the principal duty of the progressive Christian. His is the forward look. His path is an ascent, and he must beware of the past burdening his advance. Having learned his lesson, he must "forget the things that are behind."

The Christian should not cherish the memory of his mistakes, as brooding over these will only discourage him. They are natural to human infirmity. He must expect to make mistakes. He will make them again. To be ever thinking of them, and fearing their recurrence, will only hold him back.

Nothing is more blessed in the gospel than this grace that we can "forget those things which are behind." Despite every hindrance, the Christian is to press onward and upward. The past, with its sorrows and shame, put forever behind, his aim is altogether set on the supernal heights.—Rev. Junius B. Remensnyder.

REV. J. W. ELDER.

Rev. J. W. Elder was born in Chambers County January 15, 1862, and fell on sleep August 22, 1924, being 62 years of age. When quite a boy, about 13 years old, he joined the Church at New Hope, and pretty soon gave his life to the Christian ministry.

As a minister, he was modest, very much reserved, yet faithful in rendering service for the Church. Few men have ever lived who won and held with increasing esteem their associates as did he, being a man always true to his convictions, fighting for imperishable moral treasures.

He came into our community eight years ago with a heart full of longing to live in a larger way. He gained the admiration of all who knew him. We feel that his influence, teaching and noble deeds are well worthy of a place in our remembrance. He has labored self-sacrificingly for the cause he loved so dearly. While we feel that we cannot do without him, yet God is too good to make a mistake.

We wish to express our sympathy to the bereaved ones, and as to our own loss words are inadequate to picture our feelings. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That, although our hearts, as well as those of his companion, children and relatives, are so deeply grieved because of our loss, yet we rejoice in the hope that it is all well with him.

That as he was willing and pure, laboring in his simple, straightforward manner, he expressed a character of sterling excellence.

That we offer the sincere condolence of our hearts to the bereaved family, pledging our continued faithfulness to the principles and activities that engrossed his life.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy spread upon the minutes of the Church record, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun and the Progressive Age for publication.

HOW DOCTORS TREAT COLDS AND THE FLU

To break up a cold over night or to cut short an attack of grippe, influenza or sore throat, physicians and druggists are now recommending Calotabs, the nauseless Calomel tablet, that is purified from dangerous and sickening effects. Those who have tried it say that it acts like magic, by far more effective and certain than the old style calomel, heretofore recommended by physicians.

One or two Calotabs at bed time with a swallow of water,—that's all. No salts, no nausea nor the slightest interference with eating, work or pleasures. Next morning your cold has vanished and your system feels refreshed and purified. Calotabs are sold only in original sealed packages, price ten cents for the vest-pocket size; thirty-five cents for the large family package. Recommended and guaranteed by druggists. Your money back if you are not delighted.—adv.

Building a Country Sunday School

By E. L. Middleton.

Mr. Middleton possesses definite qualifications for the preparation of this work. For twelve years after leaving college, he was a day school and Sunday School teacher in a village that had "once-a-week" preaching, with half the membership of the Sunday School living in the open country; while for fourteen years more he has been a State Sunday School secretary in rural State. Mr. Middleton urges the adoption of no novel or revolutionary ideas or methods. He recognizes the place and the value of recognized Sunday School policies and methods, and has prepared a digest of the essentials in a manner plain enough to render it adaptable for use in any rural school. Methods, administration, organization and development are each and all discussed in this book in an eminently practical way.

The price of the book is $1.25. You can order it through "The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

A Great Magazine.—

The International Council of Religious Education has just issued the first number of a new journal, the International Journal of Religious Education, with Dr. Edward W. Raffety as editor. If the first number of the journal is any indication of what it is to be in the future, it will take its place at once at the head of religious educational publications. It is well conceived and well executed. It seems that copies of this publication have been sent to many superintendents and pastors. It ought to receive a careful examination, and many subscriptions should flow into its office in Chicago. It is just the kind of publication which so many schools need for their work. It seems to be practically filled with common-sense methods which we can really use in our work.

Member of Cabinet Dies.—

Henry C. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, died in Washington, D. C., October 25th. The nation's business was halted for four hours on the following Monday, while the funeral of the late Secretary was conducted in the east room of the White House.

President and Mrs. Coolidge, members of the Cabinet, the diplomatic corps, and many other government employees attended the funeral, which was conducted by the Rev. Wallace Radcliffe, pastor of the Church which Secretary Wallace attended while in Washington. At 3 o'clock Monday, the funeral party started for Des Moines, Iowa, the residence of the Secretary. Secretary of the Interior Hubert Work accompanied the party as the official representative of the President.

Mr. Wallace is the first Cabinet officer to die in office since the death of Henry Payne, Postmaster-General, during the first Roosevelt administration. The Secretary of Agriculture had done excellent work in his department, and his going will be widely mourned. Dr. Charles F. Marvin, director of the United States Weather Bureau, has been asked by the President to take charge of the administration of the affairs of the department for the time being, in the absence of Assistant Secretary Howard M. Gore.

Ford Withdraws Offer.—

Henry Ford has withdrawn his offer for Muscle Shoals. He stated in an interview in Collier's Weekly, announcing the withdrawal, that what should have been a simple matter of business has become an involved political question, and that he is in business, and not in politics. He declared that he believed the Muscle Shoals property might be operated by government engineers, but that he thought the plan of the President to operate it by an impartial commission was best. The withdrawal of Mr. Ford's offer somewhat lessens the complication of this much-involved matter. He is right, however, in declaring that this vast national resource should not be split up, but should be operated as a unit for the good of the nation. It has possibilities unequaled by any other property in America; Niagara alone excepted. and that only as an equal. While politicians cavil, the vast power of Muscle Shoals lies idle. We need more action and less talk from the government.

Methodists Go Outside of Ranks.—

Dr. James L. McConaughy has been chosen as president of Wesleyan College. He has been president of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill. Dr. McConaughy is one of the younger educators, a graduate of Yale, and a former professor in Bowdoin and Dartmouth. He first came into prominence as an opponent of the adoption of the German method in education. He is a well-known enemy of the lecture method in teaching. Dr. McConaughy's election to the Wesleyan presidency is the second time recently that the Methodists have gone outside their ranks for a head of an important institution. The other was Walter Dill Scott, president of Northwestern University. Dr. McConaughy is not yet forty years old. He has, however, climbed to a high position in the educational world.

The choosing of Dr. McConaughy as head of a great Methodist institution is important, in that it shows that the Methodist Church feels that efficiency, and not denominationalism, is the end to be achieved in the Church college. It means, too, that gradually the liberal element of the Church is coming to triumph.

Bible in the Philippines.—

Hon. Teodoro R. Yangco, a leading Filipino Christian, said at the World's Sunday School Convention, in Glasgow: "Before America came to the Philippines, the Bible was a closed book. We had certain forms of Christianity, but we knew little of its reality as power in life. Our people were under the yoke of ecclesiastical bondage and tyranny. Religious freedom was unknown. Every act was carefully watched by paid emissaries of the Roman Church. To incur the enmity or even suspicion of the friars meant cruel persecution and often death. But today, how different! The Bible is open. Sunday Schools are everywhere. Conscience has been liberated. People are free to think. The old days of religious oppression are gone forever. We are living in a new era." Mr. Yangco told how, when he was six years old, his mother, at the command of the priest, had burned a Bible which had come into her hands, and he went on: "I grew up to believe that it was unsafe, and my dear mother died believing that it was unsafe, to read the Bible. I am sorry for those many years of wasted opportunity, but I am glad that now I am not afraid to read and study the greatest Book in the world."—Missionary Review of the World.

Students Stir Up Presbyterians.—

The resolutions passed by a group of Presbyterian students which met recently at Saugatuck, Mich., has stirred the Presbyterian Church profoundly. The Presbyterian, long the mouthpiece of opposition to Fosdick, opened fire with an editorial under the caption "Students' Sacrilegious Impertinence." In the course of the editorial, The Presbyterian remarks: "The State school, where there is no religious instruction, is safer than the professed Christian school which is undermining truth and dishonoring the Church's testimony and the Word of God. If this is the result of the work of Christian colleges, then no wonder the Board (of Christian Education) cannot secure sufficient funds for their work. No sane or thoughtful Christian could give the Lord's money to produce such results as this."

In a reply the board has made public, it says: "Our board has no responsibility whatsoever for these resolutions; but we are profoundly anxious about the spiritual life of these students. . . . This group came together, as have many other bodies of students recently, for the purpose of studying religious problems in their college and university life. They spent three days in conference and devotional study of the Bible. The report they drew up which has been widely published was supposed to give their analysis of the situation from the student's point of view, and to suggest the remedy. These frank statements must be examined with great care. We must see to it that a wise directive contact is established between these inquiring young people and Church leaders. It would be unfortunate to lose our patience with the young people in our own households because they have said things, some of which our mature judgments cannot confirm."

Students may not be, indeed often are not, right in the conclusions which they reach, but the fact that they are thinking deserves some degree of praise. What the Church must do is not to suppress the young people, but to direct them. We honor the man who dares to go ahead. We plead for initiative, and when young people answer to our appeal we turn and score them with vile epithets. What can they think of the Church which does it? How long can we hope to hold them? What can we hope to do for them when we build barriers between them and us? They need sympathy, understanding and love. This we must give them, so we can save them to the Church and to Christ.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., having closed his pastorate with Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, now resides at Windsor, Va., where he is in charge of the pastorate recently vacated by Rev. T. E. White.

Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., was, at the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference, elected president-emeritus of the Conference for life. A token of confidence, gratitude and appreciation well deserved.

Rev. Jas. L. Foster having closed his pastorate with the Waverly Christian Church, is now with his family at their home, Elon College, N. C. Bro. Foster will be glad to correspond with any Church or pastorate needing a pastor.

Those who failed to send their renewals up to Conference will please use the mails for that purpose. Not all can go to Conference, and it is not always convenient to send by your representative, but a money order is safe and acceptable at all times.

The Richmond Council of Churches, with headquarters at Y. M. C. A. Building, meets today for the election of officers, appointment of committees, and the outlining of the work to be immediately undertaken by the council. Executive Secretary Mr. Edward G. Coster can be found at the Y. M. C. A. Building.

Rev. V. T. Crawford, recently joining the Eastern Virginia Conference from the Virginia Methodist Conference, is now pastor of our Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Va. His first impressions upon our people there are very favorable, and the outlook at Elm Avenue is quite bright and hopeful.

Dr. W. H. Denison, secretary of stewardship of the General Convention of the Christian Church, on his return from the Eastern Virginia Conference, called at the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN last week between trains. Will be glad to welcome Dr. Denison to our city when he comes this way.

The Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago (D. L. Moody, founder) desires to get into touch beneficially with Christian workers anywhere in the United States who are ministering spiritually to prisoners, those committed to poorhouses or "farms," as well as the boys and girls sent to State industrial or reform schools. The association has a provision for supplying, gratuitously, gospel books, Scripture portions, etc.

Rev. O. D. Poythress and his South Norfolk people are very happy. They have broken the ground for their new $75,000 house of worship. This is a stupendous task, and means a very heavy burden. But a people are never quite so happy as when they are unitedly undertaking a great task and getting beneath a great burden for their Lord. Many burdens, grievous and seemingly unbearable at the time, come in memory to be "the sweet old burdens." We congratulate and envy Bro. Poythress and his people.

The following is pleasing information, not only to THE SUN editors, but readers as well. Many other Christian Endeavor Societies are falling in line also:

"Ramseur, N. C.

"Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

"Dear Sir,—The Pleasant Ridge Christian Endeavor Society has agreed to give one offering a month to the mission work at Fancy Gap, Va. I am enclosing personal check for $1.25, which is our offering for October. Yours truly,

"GEO. T. GUNTER, Ex-Pres."

From the Daily News Record, Harrisonburg, Va., we get the following: "Linville, Octover 22. —Many friends of Rev. R. P. Crumpler will be sorry to learn that he is confined to his bed. Mr. Crumpler had been complaining for some time, and after an X-ray picture his physician, Dr. G. W. Rolston, found the trouble was due to a fallen stomach. Mr. Crumpler is the pastor of several Christian Churches on the Rockingham circuit, including Linville, Antioch, New Hope, Beulah and Mount Olivet, and will be unable to fill his appointments for a few weeks." Bro. Crumpler is one of our busy and burdened pastors. We regret indeed to learn of his illness, and trust he will soon be in full health and strength again.

Evidently Mr. J. A. Garber, county treasurer of Rockingham County, Harrisonburg, Va., is somewhat acquainted with the young people in his county, and it is furthermore self-evident that the young people of his county are very similar to those in other counties of this glorious Union. Elsewhere is printed from the Harrisonburg Daily Record a rather extended report of Mr. Garber's address recently delivered at Bridgewater College. SUN readers will ask themselves whether Mr. Garber has exaggerated conditions of the people of his acquaintance or whether he portrays conditions that obtain quite generally now. At any rate, the report of his address makes very interesting reading.

The following glad note is in line with what our Conferences and Conventions are all urging our Sunday Schools to do, and that which most of our schools are now doing. It is indeed a splendid omen for the Christian Church and our Sunday Schools that we can co-operate and put on a program that means progress and power. THE CHRISTIAN SUN hopes the day is not far distant when every Sunday School in all the Churches in the Southern Convention will have fallen in line and do the good thing as indicated herewith:

"Windsor, Va., Oct. 29, 1924.

"Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary,
Elon College, N. C.

"Dear Sir,—The Windsor Christian Sunday School decided in September that it would contribute one Sunday's offering out of each month to missions. The Sunday decided upon was the fourth Sunday in each month. I am enclosing our check for $10.26 to cover amount for September and October.

FIELD NOTES.

Our revival meeting began at Patterson Grove the second Sunday in August. Rev. Elisha Bradshaw assisted in the meeting, which lasted seven days. There were six professions and the Church was greatly revived.

Our meeting at Antioch (R.), beginning the fourth Sunday in September, was hindered by rain the first three days. The remaining three days of the meeting Rev. Elisha Bradshaw earnestly preached three times each day. There were two professions, and the Church seemed greatly strengthened.

CHAPLAINS FOR THE NAVY.

BY REV. E. O. WATSON, Secretary,
General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

More than a year ago, provision was made by the Bureau of Navigation to increase the number of navy chaplains from 85 to 100. There was, and is, great need in the navy for more even than 100 chaplains. One hundred chaplains would leave some fifteen stations without supply, but would fill nearly, if not all, the more important places.

Earnest call was issued in July and August last for the fifteen additional chaplains provided for. Since that time, we have constantly stressed the demand for chaplains, even going so far as to address the dean or president of all the larger theological seminaries of the country, asking for lists of ministers passing through the seminary for five years past who, in the judgment of the dean, would make good chaplains. A number of names were furnished us, and correspondence was entered into with those. Representatives of the chaplaincy visited a number of the general meetings of religious bodies the past spring and summer and presented the need for chaplains. The general committee on army and navy chaplains wrote to representatives of each denomination, stating the need and urging co-operation in finding the men. A definite article on the need was sent out to the religious press and releases were sent out showing quotas needed from the various denominations. Oothers were requested to write articles concerning the need. To date, the net result of all this effort is that there are now exactly 84 navy chaplains, one less than the number actively in service fifteen months ago.

This office wrote directly to many ministers, asking if they were disposed to consider the navy chaplaincy as a lifework. From these and others, sixteen applications were received, of which ten were approved by representatives of the Churches, three of these failed in physical examination, so that only seven new chaplains have been commissioned. The denominational affiliation of the seven is as follows: Baptist (North), 2; Baptist (South), 2; Congregational, 1; Presbyterian, U. S. A., 1; Roman Catholic, 1. Meantime, resignations, retirements and death removed eight from the active service: Episcopal, 3 resigned; Roman Catholic, 3 resigned; Baptist (North), 1 deceased; Methodist Episcopal (South), 1 retired.

This is both surprising and painful. Surprising in view of the great opportunity for service in the navy chaplaincy; painful as we think of what the failure to respond means on the one hand to the men of the navy, and on the other to the ministry and the Churches they represent.

Each chaplain in the navy on regular assignment has a parish with an average of approximately 1,200 men. Few pastors have as many men, and we dare say none has a better opportunity to reach every man of his parish. Within the compass of a battleship, the chaplain may find at all times each and every one of his parishioners, or secure definite information concerning him. Sooner or later, he touches at the port of practically every country. The chaplain in the navy has an unparelleled opportunity, not only to the men of the ship with whom he is so intimately associated, but a great missionary opportunity as he touches foreign ports. There is, too, opportunity for study, the broadening influence of travel and intimate association with navy officers, who are cultured men. In his work aboard ship, the chaplain does not suffer from ungenerous denominational rivalries. In the regular ministry, even a small parish in the country or country town has to meet the rivalry of half a dozen or more denominations. The chaplain aboard ship is the sole representative of the Christian ministry. Should the minister be away from the regular pastorate, whether for a long period or a short, there is no fear but that the gospel will be preached and his parishioners have opportunity to hear it. Indeed, too often the pastor's chief fear is that his people will hear too much from some rival denomination. On the other hand, if the battleship is without a chaplain, there is no gospel preached and no spiritual ministry save of a purely voluntary character.

Again, while we would have no man come into the chaplaincy for mercenary reasons, ministers must live in order to carry on their work, and they can carry on that work all the better if assured of a certain living and of adequate provision in case of breakdown, or upon retirement. The budget of the Bureau of Navigation shows that the average provision for chaplains for the next twelve months is approximately $4,186 each for the year—a better average, we feel sure, than is afforded in what might be termed the middle, if not the upper tier of pastoral charges. Should one break down, or reach the age of retirement, under the law, he is assured of three-fourths base-pay for the remainder of his life. The writer was born in the ministry nearly sixty years ago, and entered it actively thirty-nine years ago. He has more than once been face to face with the problem, "what if my health gives way!" and now that he is within a few years of the legal age of retirement in army and navy, it would be a comfort to know that in either contingency he might receive "to the end" three-fourths of his pay. He could easily plan a useful and happy old age of retirement on three-quarters of the requirement for active service. So, all in all, we are surprised, in view of the opportunity also for effective service.

We are pained, above all, that the men of the navy should be left without spiritual ministry. Sixteen stations, averaging 1,200 men, without spiritual ministry means that a total of approximately 19,000 young men of America engaged in the service of their country, representatives of homes of every part of the land, are without spiritual ministry. No argument of pacifist or militarist enters, or should enter, into this. It is a question of 19,000 American citizens who have been taken from their homes to serve their country being neglected by the Churches and allowed to go absolutely without the service of a Christian minister.

It is painful, too, to think that this failure to secure chaplains for the navy may be due either to unwillingness on the part of the Church to give their finest young men to this service, or, on the part of young ministers to invest their lives in such service. It is true the Churches need these men for pastors. Some of our replies indicated that Church leaders would not recommend that young men enter the chaplaincy because there was such a great need at home. This is painful to think of because of the selfish spirit it would indicate, finally resulting in fatal consequences to the Churches themselves. The Church that pursues a policy of that sort has always dried up. Besides, the men who are enlisted in the service of the navy will, in a few years, as a rule, return to the home communities from which they enlisted. Their value as they return is largely dependent upon the religious ministry they receive while in the service. Men who lack such religious service during the period of their enlistment, returning to their communities are not likely to be of value to the Churches to which they return.

From the ministers' standpoint, there are sacrifices in the chaplaincy of the navy. He is called upon to be removed sometimes for long periods from home and home ties. He is cut off to some extent from association with his brethren of the ministry. In many respects, he stands alone. On board ship, he is without the backing of an official board. He must work out his own plans. But what is to be said of the man who weighs mere circumstances of this sort against opportunities and need for service? We believe the true conception of the call to preach includes willingness to serve where there is need, whether at home, in the foreign field or in the chaplaincy.

The call for chaplains is a Macedonian cry. We need men who, in the spirit of Paul, will answer. We need men who have had the threefold vision of Isaiah, the vision of God, the vision of sin, and the vision of grace, and who, qualified by such vision, will reply as he did, "Here am I, send me."

The age limits for chaplaincy in the navy are from 21 to 31½ years. A chaplain should be well educated, having not only a college degree, but a full course in some theological seminary. It is also highly desirable that he should have experience in work for men and in athletics. He should be a virile, red-blooded, tactful man, standing foursquare and not easily led away by surroundings. He must be a real man and a man's man. Such a man will appeal to officers and enlisted men alike. The navy desires and will accept only the finest and best-equipped men for chaplains. One enters with the rank of junior lieutenant; after seven years' service, he is promoted to lieutenant. After serving not less than eleven years in all, he is promoted to lieutenant-commander, and after that, promotion is according to record by selection. At present, the highest rank to be reached is that of captain, which corresponds to that of colonel in the army. Pay and allowance ranges from some $3,000 on entering the service, to $6,000 in its higher ranks.

We urge Church leaders to look for and commend young men suitable to this service. We urge qualified young men to consider seriously the opportunity of the navy chaplaincy for life investment. We believe it is a ringing call of God. "Who will go for us, and whom shall I send?"

Correspondence is invited either directly with the office of the chief of chaplains, Captain Evan W. Scott, Bureau of Navigation, Washington, D. C., or with Rev. E. O. Watson, secretary, general committee on army and navy chaplains, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, 937 Woodward Building, Washington, D. C.

YOUR OWN CHURCH.

If you want to work in the kind of a Church
  Like the kind of a Church you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
  And start on a long, long hike.
You'll only find what you left behind,
  For there's nothing that's really new—
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your Church;
  It isn't your Church: it's you!
Real Churches aren't made by men afraid
  Lest somebody else goes ahead;
When every one works and nobody shirks,
  You can raise a Church from the dead.
And if while you make your personal stake,
  Your neighbor can make one, too,
Your Church will be what you want to see—
  It isn't your Church: it's you!

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

Much is said and written, and more, no doubt, is thought in these days of the decline in Church attendance. Ministers get discouraged. Laymen lose heart. Congregations seem small. The Church is losing ground. All sorts of suggestions are offered to increase Church attendance. Suppers, games, concerts, attractive sermons for young people, more social attractions, all in the interest of the kingdom and the people; and in spite of all these, many feel that Church attendance is on the wane. "Look," they say, "at the crowds at the moving-picture shows, the ball games, the fairs; look at the automobiles on Sunday afternoon. People don't go to Church like they used to do."

It is time to prove that proposition or to get a different view of the situation. Something must be done or faith in Jesus Christ and His Church will wane. Nothing hinders progress more than discouragement. The disciples in the storm measured their condition by outward conditions. They looked at the storm and lost sight of the presence of Christ and His request, "Let us pass over unto the other side." Outward forces are weak compared with divine presence and power. In the present state of mind, many fear for the safety, much less the growth, of the Church. But circumstances must not displace the promises of God. He has promised that the "kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and His Christ." His word cannot fail. "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." We should heed the word of God more than the words of men. But an examination may reveal the fallacy of current opinion on this subject of Church attendance.

Fairs, ball games, moving pictures are attended by crowds. People will sit in the grandstand at a fair, when the night air is chill, and enjoy the performances. No doubt they would complain of the same atmospheric condition in the Church. They will sit in the sunshine and wind in the grandstand at a ball game and make no complaint. It would be too hot for a revival meeting or a Sunday service. This is all true, and perhaps more; but that does not prove that Church attendance is waning. If the fair lasted all year, the crowds would not be there. The races could not last. The lunch places would be vacant. If these things lasted as long as Church attendance, they would fall out of the race. They are commercial and social sports that have their place and perform their part and then cease for a time. No right-thinking mind would condemn such organizations as fairs; but the Church must not be deceived by the crowds, the expenditures, and exhibits of farm, factory, forests and the mechanical world. Domestic and commercial exhibits, school products, with beasts and birds, help to develop society and the great masses, human interests and human co-operation.

What this editorial has in view is to lead readers to see and feel that Church attendance is not on the decline. If all the people in any community, town or city, who attend Sunday School, Church services, Church societies, religious meetings, were brought together in one throng, they would outnumber all other meetings—and this goes on all the time. In a given period of time, and over a given area of space, Church attendance is on the increase, and righteousness is growing in public thought, public purpose, and public favor. Behaviour on railway trains, in public assemblies, in factories, in stores, in schools, is improving all the time. The religious organizations outside of the Church, which are nothing more nor less than the Church at work beyond herself, as Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., King's Daughters, welfare workers, orphanages, are all outpost activities of the Church. The Church activities are increasing all the time. What the pulpit, the pew, and the press need is more faith in God, a more hopeful view of the Church—faith in God, faith in the Church, and faith in ourselves. War puts new evils into society, the Church suffers for a time, but out of it come new activities and new progress. Loss of faith and complaints set the Church back, but complaints and renewed faith set the Church forward. Ths Church needs surgeons as well as advisers. Evil must be removed before treatment can cure.

A NEW INSTITUTION AT ELON.

Sunday afternoon, October 26th, there began a service at Elon College which, unless the writer is much mistaken, is destined to become one of the outstanding institutions of the Church and the college. It was a vesper service, conducted from 4 to 5 Sunday P. M., in the Whitley Memorial Building. Outside of the brief and essential announcements of the organist in charge, not a word was spoken during the services, and yet one ventures to think that seldom have such deep emotions, high sentiments, noble aspirations, and holy desires been kindled in the hearts of the assembled audience in so brief a time.

The great pipe organ, with its infinite range of harmony and sound, pealed forth in minuet, meditation, and melodies, in pleas and in praise till it seemed that, not the audience only, but the building itself, the hour and the place, were all athrob and athrill with devotion to God and a holy reverence to His name.

Miss Nolan, the college organist, presided, and through the notes and strains of the instrument poured forth her own soul in devout song and happy hymns of praise, trust and confidence in such subdued and sublime manner that the whole audience could not be otherwise than in a holy and reverential frame of mind. This writer does not recall having spent an hour that was more completely filled with all that goes to stir noble sentiments, sublime emotions, and the spirit of worship as was this hour.

The writer is advised that these vesper services begun Sunday, October 26th, will be conducted at 4 o'clock in the afternoon once per month during the college year. If this program is carried out, it takes little foresight to predict that not many of these services will be held before the Whitley Memorial Auditorium will be packed to its capacity. One does not have to advertise and herald a service of that kind after people have come to know it and share its joys. Its goodness and its glory will simply break forth and herald themselves far and near. It would be worth any one's while to ride a hundred miles last Sunday afternoon to enjoy for one hour this glorious volume of praise and prayer and meditation, voiced in the melody of a noble organ and a skilled and soulful performer.

All of which reminds us to say that Elon now has one of the very best and most adequate pipe organs within the range of our knowledge, and one in which the Church, as well as the college, may indulge a praiseworthy and pardonable pride. It is safe to say that in the last half century the art of organ building has advanced more rapidly than in three centuries previous to that time. As a recent writer said in "Church Management," we have now our detached consoles, which make it possible to have an organ in sections, electric action, which makes the response as quick and as soft as that of a piano, and the old superstition is now discarded that the player of an organ must be a strong man. These wonderful improvements have been brought about by that great inventor and world-famous organist, Mr. Robert Hope-Jones, of England, who was, beside being organist of St. John's Church, at Birkenhead, an electrical engineer. One day the inventor undertook the task of moving the organ in his Church from one end of the building to the other. When he had taken down his organ to set it up at the desired location, he found that the space would not permit. He then fell back upon his electrical skill and moved the console and a part of the organ, but applied electrical power to control the remainder of his organ and the speaking pipes. Of course, his first experiments were not successful, but Robert Hope-Jones was no quitter, and he persisted in his experiments until he gave us the present modern instrument with its detached parts employed in various sections of the building and sending forth sweet chimes or soft notes, or great volumes of sound from seemingly closed spaces of the walls of the building. As some one has pointed out, if Robert Hope-Jones had been successful in moving the organ, as he had hoped to do, with little trouble or experiment, he would certainly have avoided a lot of work and months on months of anxiety and worry. But there was not room for it, so he worked and worried until he gave the world its modern organ. "Another hill of difficulty proved to be a way of life."

When we, in our day, sit entranced and inspired by instruments that pour forth their strains and their echoes from various and seemingly all parts of the building in which we worship, our hearts should speak a word of gratitude and praise to Robert Hope-Jones, and before him hundreds of others who wrought to give our day an instrument of holy, heavenly range and uplift.

The vesper service at Elon College is more than a passing enterprise. If built into the college life, as we are confident it will be, it will come to be an outstanding institution, a worth-while enterprise, making a most valuable and helpful contribution to our motto with meaning, "Christian Character First and Always at Elon."

MODERN FREEDOM OF YOUNG PEOPLE.

(From "Daily News-Record," Harrisonburg, Va.)

"Our young people are the most unsecluded, unsuppressed, unsuperintended, unchaperoned youth of all ages; they are the 'freemen of history,'" declared J. A. Garber, president of the Rockingham County Sunday School Association and county treasurer, in an address in which he opened the lecture course at Bridgewater College today.

Mr. Garber declared that the hope of the nation to come lies in the generation of young people strengthening their moral character to meet the increasing problems of tomorrow. In illustrating his point, he quoted one of the great prophets, who after brooding over the condition of his people, said their need was "lengthen your ropes and strengthen your stakes." He declared the American nation, almost overnight, has leaped to the forefront of nations. To meet these new responsibilities which leadership in wealth and achievements brings, the American people, especially the young people, must strengthen their moral character to meet the lengthening of their tasks.

Urges Bible in Schools.

Mr. Garber also urged the reading of the Bible in the public schools as one of the means of strengthening the moral fiber of the growing generation. He declared it is almost inconceivable that a great Christian nation as this country boasts to be should object to a policy of this kind in its schools.

"As you enter one new field of study and activity after another; as life, with its new vision, new hopes, and new ambitions unfolds to you day by day, you are lengthening the ropes," said Mr. Garber, talking directly to the student body, "and let me urge that you strengthen the stakes.

Must Get Self-Control.

"You are a part of the great group of young people today who are enjoying an extended freedom unknown in any other age of the world, and to balance this you must achieve a stabilizing self-control.

"A generation ago parental authority was somewhat in style, and the conduct of young folks was governed in a measure by that authority; but in the last generation such external restraints have disappeared with marvelous rapidity, so that today, in our country, in place of the Asiatic method of seclusion and repression, we have absolute freedom and abandon.

"Our young people are the most unsecluded, unsuppressed, unsuperintended, unchaperoned youth of all ages. They are the 'freemen of history.' Our theory is to train them in individual initiative, to develop self-control, to teach them to rely on their own judgment. We throw them on their own resources. This is very good when they have the resources!

Cites Girls' Drinking.

"We do not need to go far afield to find groups of young people who are making unmitigated nuisances of themselves because the length of their freedom has got beyond the strength of their self-control. How often a splendid concert, an inspiring lecture or sermon is spoiled for a large portion of the audience by the jabbering of two or more young people whose new-found freedom is supported by no self-control! The story is told of a group of American girls, supposedly from one of our best families, who recently went with a publicly organized party on a tour of Europe. These girls drank, smoked and behaved so immodestly that they became a scandal to the entire party. They were enjoying a liberty that they knew not how to handle.

"And so with many—their moral stakes are too weak to their lengthened ropes of freedom, and their tents are wildly flapping—and so we have our modern 'flapper.'

Freedom Rests on Self-Control.

"This brings me to a principle I would like for you to remember: real freedom must rest upon self-control. Freedom is something more than release from old restraint. May I give you a very simple illustration? A few months ago I planted in my yard a tree-rose and drove a stake in the ground by its side to support it from the attacks of the wind. That tree in its heart may resent this restraint and may be calling for freedom, but if the only freedom it is seeking is the release from encumbrance of that stake, it will discover, when I remove the stake, that the only freedom it has really achieved is to fall over when the first wind blows. The first step toward freedom for that tree is to grow deep roots on which it can safely depend; then, when I remove the support, it can defy the storm.

"So in life, young people's freedom is never a matter of mere release from old limitations. It is essentially a matter of substituting positive inward self-control for the outward restraints.

Cites Released Slaves.

"What is true of the individual is true of the State. We have learned that we may slay our kings and get our Robespieres, our Lenines and a reign of blood and anarchy. A half-century ago we set free some eight million slaves only to be followed by a period of suffering and strife that will always remain a sad memory for our fair Southland. These instances teach us the lesson that real freedom in a State does not consist alone in making a tyrant stop taking charge of a people, or in removing external restraints; but that it does consist in the intelligent ability of people to take charge of themselves and exercise the self-control and restraint necessary to insure the safety and happiness of society.

Prepare for Tomorrow.

"Nationally, as we lengthen the ropes we must strengthen the stakes. As a nation, we have made marvelous strides in the past several decades. In the fields of science and applied mechanics, our inventive genius has never known a parallel in all history. In power and influence, we have grown from a second-rate nation to a great world power. Our extension has been little short of a miracle, but I would pause to ask seriously if we have strengthened our stakes as we extended our ropes.

"Are we building a foundation for our national life that will securely support this great expanded superstructure? We are lengthening our reaches year by year in every field of activity. We have time neither for rest nor meditation.

"But I tell you, my friends, this eternal emphasis we are placing on expansion must be matched by a renewed emphasis upon the spiritual forces of life that fortify, that give self-control, that build moral foundations under men. Oh, yes, we are energetic, vigorous and progressive, but we are distracted and restless. We lack poise and balance. We have no spiritual reserve. We have no appreciation of values.

Pay Millions to Foolishness.

"We pay a million dollars a year to see a silly fool tangle up his spider legs and fall down a few times, and we hurrah for Charlie Chaplin because he made us laugh! and we let thousands of our earnest, conscientious school teachers work on a mere pittance because they are engaged in the serious task of training the hearts and minds of our girls and boys for future citizenship!

"The newspapers, day after day, give columns and pages of notice with regard to his training and then we pay a half-million dollars to see this big hunk of meat stand up for thirty minutes and beat the faces of another big brute into a jelly, and we say 'Great is Dempsey!' And all this time we are permitting hundreds of our poor ministers, who are carrying hope and joy and light into the secluded corners of the world, to continue their service of foundation-building with a support that scarcely provides the bare necessities of life. I tell you, we must turn our attention to driving the stakes to match the strain in our civilization. Some way, somehow, we must provide a spiritual underpinning if our Western civilization is to be made secure.

Moral Training in Schools.

"In a large measure, this must be the work of our schools, co-operating with our Churches. First, our free schools should offer more positive moral training. Because of our differing beliefs, religious teaching has been barred from most of our schools, and the result has been that the children have been receiving practically no moral training. Is it any wonder that practically all the criminals are declared to develop during the period of the public school life?

"I have listened to all the different arguments advanced against the introduction of the Bible into the free schools, but I have yet to hear an argument that is convincing. We hear the cry that denominationalism will be taught We forget that creed is man-made, and that the great fundamental moral and spiritual principles of life are set forth as the heart of the Bible independent of any and all creeds. And these principles made real in their lives are the crying need of the youth of our land; and I insist that the State is not laying an enduring foundation for its boys and girls when it ignores this elemental necessity. In its great free-school system it is lengthening the ropes without strengthening the stakes.

"As an economic proposition—if the State had no higher consideration—it should be recognized that an educated criminal is more expensive than one not educated. It seems almost unbelievable that a Christian country should object to the introduction of the Christian Bible into her free schools. If the Bible is a redeeming and saving force in our civilization, certainly the logical time for it to be taught is during the teaching age of the girl and boy, and the logical place is where the boy and girl receive their other educational training. It is no less the duty of the State to teach the heart than the head of the youth, and this cannot be adequately done without the Book.

"Passing to the higher institutions of learning, a note of warning needs to be sounded here. Many of our colleges and universities are turning out mental gymnasts fundamentally unprepared for the responsibilities of life. They have no spiritual stability that can stand the strain of life's toil and the shock of life's tragedy. They represent a splendid superstructure built upon the sand. They have lengthened the ropes without strengthening the stakes.

"My final word is with colleges like this—the small denominational colleges—that recognize that the first and paramount consideration of all education is permanent foundation laying. The Church colleges and other institutions, guided by consecrated hearts as well as trained minds, are the hope of our nation. From these come the leaders into every department of our complex civilization, where they bring the stabilizing influence of their training. My hope is that Bridgewater College, and other Christian institutions of our land may continue to make their rich contribution to our State and nation, not in excelling scholarship, but in moral and spiritual values that will strengthen the stakes that make secure the extended ropes of our civilization."

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Two fairs were held in Suffolk last week—the Four-County Fair, by the white people, and the Tidewater Fair, by the negroes. Both were well attended, and the exhibits were fine. Fifteen thousand attended the negro fair, and thirty thousand the white fair. Farm exhibits, horses, cattle, swine, sheep, poultry would have done credit to a State fair. Machinery, automobiles, manufactures and stores had fine exhibits. Art-work by schools, wild animals and birds, with needlework, made variety that suited all. Winners of blue ribbons were congratulated by their friends. Horse races, auto races, actors, the band, dining-rooms, lunch counters, and side shows furnished entertainment for all tastes and all ages. Rest rooms and health units added comfort and help to the tired and sick. Fireworks at night attracted and entertained the people.

The business, educational, and social contact, under well-regulated supervision, is a valuable asset in community life. The competition in field, barnyard, home, school, shop, store, and factory inspires young people and old to do their best not only in production, but in display. All people know they learn from one author; and such intercourse is in itself a real school. The fair is a great public school, and all are learners. Friday was children's day, and they thronged the grounds and enjoyed the day.

But this is not written for the fair alone, but as a temperance lesson in actual life. There are still some people who think that prohibition is a failure, and that people drink as much as they ever did. I walked through both fairs. I saw no sign of drink, and the behaviour seemed as good as at a Sunday School picnic. I consulted the officers who had charge of conduct in the negro fair. He said: "I have not heard an oath, I have not seen a person under the influence of liquor, there has been no fight, and no occasion for arrest." It was the same at the other fairs. Such a report would have been impossible in saloon days. The abolution of the saloon has wrought such improvement in the business, behaviour, and progress of society as to contradict current reports by mouth and printed page concerning the liquor question. The improvement in society has been equal to the improvement of public roads and public schools. A walk through negro settlements, with new houses, new furniture and musical instruments, automobiles and improvement in dress will convince any doubter on the temperance question. To be sure, the prohibition law is violated! All laws are violated—gambling laws are violated; the Sabbath laws are violated; traffic laws are violated; marriage laws are violated; tax laws are violated; speed laws are violated; hunting and fishing laws are violated; temperance laws are violated; but no worse than others. Violators are under cover. Temperance people are in the open. Two fairs in one week, in one city, make good witnesses for the temperance cause.

ELON LETTER.

Latin has been going out of style these last few years. Twenty-five years ago in our college, the student who did not study Latin was looked down upon as incapable of taking a solid course. Today, the student who studies Latin in Elon or in any other college is looked upon as an anachronism. Archaeologists who delight to delve in fossils and relics of the past, our modern youth admits, may properly, though improfitably, be interested in Latin; but the red-blooded, twentieth-century citizen has no concern for so antiquated a subject. About 5 per cent of our students are, therefore, regarded as entirely out of date.

The chief reason alleged by the advocates of the ancient classics for the retention of their subjects in the curriculum was that they had disciplinary value for the mind unequaled by any other branch of learning. The natural science men and the other cohorts of the modernists resented this claim. They invented a new kind of psychology to prove their point. They laughed to scorn the very suggestion of mental muscles. The pragmatic psychology knew no value save the practical; no good in any study beyond its vocational uses. These eloquent philosophers out-talked the classicists. They demanded that they be given a trial to make good. The builders of college degree courses yielded, with the result aforesaid. For be it remembered that not many college students will deliberately choose a hard study if they are told by the experts that the easy one will do them the same amount of good. The steady decline of Latin has been an outstanding fact in higher education the past generation.

Meanwhile, the psychologists have in their laboratories been developing methods of testing a man's intelligence and of measuring his mental development. It was not possible a generation ago to test scientifically a man's general intelligence nor to measure in the same accurate way, at various stages, the normalcy or abnormalcy of his mental development. All this is easy today. And many colleges confidently apply mental tests to their freshmen with a view to determining whether they are of sufficient intelligence to be permitted to remain in college. Elon freshmen are acquainted with these tests, though we take them for scientific purposes only. Elon regards intelligence as only one of a number of soul qualities fitting a man to profit by college education.

Princeton University has been conducting a series of studies for several years designed to discover the value of Latin as a contributor to general intelligence and the development of mental ability. Ten thousand students, in a variety of colleges and universities, were selected in their freshman year, and their intelligence scientifically measured and charted. Those who studied Latin as a part of their courses ranked 13 per cent higher than those of the same intelligence who omitted it, and 90 per cent of this superiority in general scholarship, or, roughly speaking, 10 per cent was directly traceable to the study of Latin. This was particularly evidenced in their superiority in English and history, two very utilitarian subjects. The laugh is on the pragmatists. Mental muscle is, therefore, certainly defensible.

It would, therefore, appear that the advocates of classical education are vindicated, and that Latin bids fair to be restored to its once honorable place of leadership in the curriculum of higher education.

The Eastern Virginia Conference held a busy session. The Conferences thus far attended seem to be rushed for time. Not sufficient time is allowed to discuss many of the reports presented.

IMPORTANT EVENTS IN OUR HISTORY.

In November, 1792, Rev. James O'Kelly and followers withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church and formed the Christian Church, first calling themselves "Republican Methodists."

In 1794, at Old Lebanon, Surry County, Va., at the suggestion of Rev. Rice Haggard, they adopted the name Christian. In 1801, Rev. Abner Jones and his followers left the Baptist Church, in New England, and in 1803, Rev. Barton W. Stone, of Kentucky, and his followers, left the Presbyterian Church. They also took the name "Christian," the Bible as their only creed, and the independence of each local Church. In 1808, the Herald of Gospel Liberty, the oldest religious newspaper published in America, was started by Dr. Elias Smith, of Portsmouth, N. H.

In 1812, Nancy Cram, of Charleston, N. Y., was the first woman minister to be ordained in the United States.

In 1826, Rev. James O'Kelly died.

In 1844, THE CHRISTIAN SUN was established by Rev. D. W. Kerr, at Hillsboro, N. C.

In 1847, the Southern Christian Association was organized.

In 1853, Antioch College, Yellow Springs, was first college to become co-educational.

In 1854, Christians, North and South, divided on account of salary; but reunited in 1890.

In 1856, the Southern Christian General Convention was organized at Union, Alamance County, N. C.

In 1866, the Southern Christian Convention was organized, and "Our Declaration of Principles, Form of Government and Directory of Worship" was adopted.

In 1876, at the suggestion of Spring Hill Church, and with Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., as the leader, the first general home mission movement began with the initiation of the note system.

In 1886, the foreign mission movement began, with Rev. P. T. Klapp as the leader, and Rev. D. F. Jones and wife, first missionaries, sailed for Japan in January, 1887.

In 1890, Elon College was opened and the Christian Missionary Association was organized in 1892.

In 1904, Convention missions was adopted by the Southern Christian Convention, first being defeated and then reconsidered on the last day of the Convention.

In 1907, the Christian Orphanage was opened.

In 1911, the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board began work.

In 1917, Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., began work as field secretary of the Mission Board and began the memorable campaign for the raising of a special fund of $100,000 for missions.

In February, 1919, was launched the drive for the Elon College standardization fund.

In December, 1919, the Men and Millions Forward Movement was begun.

In January, 1923, the emergency campaign was started for Elon College on account of the loss by fire of the administration building.

These were great events in our history, but in the last seven years we have done things and made unprecedented progress along all lines.

Membership of Southern Christian Convention in 1917 was 24,587; in 1923, 28,245—a gain of 3,658, or 15 per cent, from 1917 to 1923. Eastern Virginia Conference gained in Church membership 2,033, or 27 per cent; in Sunday School membership, 1,486, or nearly 25 per cent; in value of Church property $691,000, or over 200 per cent; in pastors' salaries, $20,541, or over 100 per cent; in Conference assessments $2,494.45, or about 50 per cent; in Woman's Board, $3,462.12, or about 170 per cent.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which meets at Pleasant Union (Harnett), November 18, 19, 20, 1924, will please notify Mr. A. M. Long, Lillington, N. C., as to how they expect to come. Those who come by rail will be met at Lillington. The Church is just a little off Highway No. 21, with good road up to Church.

J. Lee Johnson.

EASTERN N. C. CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The Eastern North Carolina Christian Conference will meet this year at Pleasant Union, Harnett County, Tuesday, November 18th, at 10 A. M., and will continue in session for three days.

All Churches are urgently requested to send a full delegation and to meet all their apportionments in full, if possible. Delegates and reports should be in Conference at the opening session, so that officers and committees may be enabled to complete their work on time. It is hoped that all delegates and ministers will be present at the opening of Conference and continue in attendance until the close. We need their assistance in working out the plans of the Church for the State, and they need the information concerning what is undertaken, that they may carry reports back to their respective Churches. This is the only method by which we can do efficient work and develop the cause of the Church in the most successful manner.

Fraternally yours,
W. C. Wicker, President.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Wilson P. Minton, D. D., Secretary.

Reports at the recent annual session of the Foreign Mission Department showed unmistakably that our work in both Japan and Porto Rico is moving steadily forward. Members of the board stated definitely that, in spite of the reverses caused by the earthquake and considerable sickness among the missionaries, the year just closed was doubtless the most constructive of any previous year. Gradually we are acquiring much-needed buildings in strategic places. We are more thoroughly organized, and we have made invaluable additions to our national forces of thoroughly and consecrated workers. And a goodly number of others are still in preparation for service.

Furthermore, we have placed under appointment to return with Miss Stacy next August, Rev. and Mrs. L. C. Fletcher, now finishing their thorough preparation at Yale. Mr. Fletcher, who is the son of Rev. W. P. Fletcher, D. D., known throughout our denomination, has for years been pursuing a course of study definitely designed to make him fit for missionary service in Japan. He and his good wife, also thoroughly trained, will be valuable additions to our present efficient force. We have also placed under appointment Miss Ruth Kirkpatrick, of Frankfort, Ind. She expects to become a missionary teacher, but plans to take another year of special training before going to the field. She is not only well trained, but, like Mr. Fletcher, she comes from a family of staunch members of the Christian Church of long standing. Others who are ready have been compelled to wait.

We hope to build several new chapels this year, and must plan to secure new mission homes to accommodate the new workers as they go out.

But these forward steps are planned in the face of a most serious financial shortage. The Foreign Mission Department has a present deficit of $11,182.76. Our budget for 1925, including the deficit, is $68,333.26, every cent of which will be needed to maintain the work in a respectable manner. Even then, the amount is $15,822.80 below what our missionaries felt was absolutely necessary to continue the work properly. We have been forced to cause the work to suffer in some features, in order that forward steps might be taken in other necessary features. We could not bring ourselves to believe, however, that the Christian Church would knowingly approve abject retrenchment along all lines.

The plans projected are to be started with the beginning of 1925. But the extent to which they can be carried out will have to depend on our ability to take care of the present deficit. This simply cannot be ignored. It must be handled quickly. We shall proceed with the proposed work just as rapidly as funds will allow. But it can readily be seen that unless the Church takes this matter seriously and sends us the funds to clear up the deficit, even the projected plans for next year will have to be curtailed still further. There is no other way. It is simply impossible to do the work without funds. On the other hand, it will be an everlasting disgrace to our Church if we allow this deficit to stand in the way of the wonderful opportunities for progress now before us, and if we permit it to stop the sending out of these splendid new recruits, of whom there are still more ready and waiting.

The facts are before the Christian Church. The board will move just as rapidly as you will make it possible to do so. If funds do not come in quickly, the deficit will be still further enlarged, and automatically all the splendid things we hope to do this year will be curtailed. Some of our forward-looking pastors and lay-workers have already sent in funds with the ringing word not to retrench. We are not putting on a special campaign, but we are counting on Churches and individuals to voluntarily send us gifts at once to get this deficit out of the way in time to enable us to move forward in 1925. Gifts now will count for more than you can imagine. Here is an opportunity for heroic service. Send in your check to reduce the deficit. Let's wipe it out.

Forty-two Churches in the Southern Christian Convention have paid over 20 per cent of quota. Many have increased their percentage since August 1, 1924, and several have been added to the list.

Reader, if your Church is not on the list it is time to become active. I believe any Church, with proper effort, can pay 20 per cent of its quota. Don't you?

J. E. West,
Chairman of Mission Board.

"MISSIONARY SUNDAY."

To the Ministers and Churches of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference:

On the afternoon of the second day of its recent session, the Conference voted to designate and observe Sunday, November 16th, as "Christian Missionary Association Sunday" in the bounds of our Conference. It further voted to obligate all of our ministers, and certain of our laymen, as well as all of our Churches, to cooperate with the Christian Missionary Association on that Sunday by carrying out the plans and objectives as outlined and determined by the association. On the strength of this, we wish to suggest the following:

First.—That every Church in our Conference plan for a morning service Sunday, November 16th.

Second.—That our ministers assist in arranging for these services, and that they hold themselves in readiness to exchange pulpits with their fellow-ministers on that morning.

Third.—That the speakers prepare to present the general theme of "Home Missions," but more especially the history, accomplishments and the claims of the Missionary Association, concluding with a plea for memberships.

The following Churches have memberships as designated: Antioch, 1; Berea (Norfolk), 2; Berea (Nansemond), 11; Bethlehem, 3; Franklin, 7; Holy Neck, 22; Holland, 14; Liberty Springs, 10; Christian Temple, 27; Berkley, 1; South Norfolk, 6; Suffolk, 47; Newport News, 11; Oakland, 1; First, Portsmouth, 6; Elm, Portsmouth, 3; Rosemont, 4; Windsor, 1.

Eliminating the Delaware and Maryland Churches, we have forty-two Churches in the Tidewater section of Virginia and North Carolina. Only eighteen of these forty-two Churches are represented in the Missionary Association, and eight of those eighteen are represented by less than five memberships.

In next week's issue of The Sun, a schedule for the services of Sunday morning, November 16th, will be published. Churches are especially urged to lookout for this. Before Thursday, the 13th, we will have the appointment of each speaker in his possession, together with certain information relative to the field he is visiting.

J. H. Lightbourne,
President Eastern Virginia Christian M. Asso.

We are grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. It will be observed that the number of schools contributing monthly to missions increases from month to month. The contributions from this source all go now to our mountain work in Carroll County, Va. We are happy at what these loyal and wide-awake schools are doing.

Gratefully,

J. O. Atkinson,
Mission Secretary.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Report of Home Missions.

While this Conference only increased in membership 46, from 1922 to 1923, making a total membership of 9,527, yet there is cause for congratulations. More Churches have preaching every Sunday, more pastorates are being formed, more parsonages are being built, and more and better Church buildings are being erected than in any period in the history of this Conference.

In 1923, this Conference contributed the following for benevolences:

Conference assessments		$ 7,568.25
Christian Missionary Association		1,450.00
S. S. & C. E. Convention		833.35
Direct to Mission Board, Dayton, Ohio.		384.50
Woman's Board		5,462.72
Mission Board		5,525.45
Men and Millions		12,316.34
Orphanage		5,535.67
Elon College standardization estimated.		7,000.00
Elon College emergency		80,000.00
S. S. for religious education		132.06
Total		$126,208.34
For all other purposes:
Pastors' salaries	$ 39,075.12
Other current expenses	19,924.15
Building, equipment and parsonages	256,021.67
S. S. & C. E.	9,112.14
		324,133.08
Grand total		$450,341.42

Per capita for benevolences, $13.24; for all local purposes, $34.02—for all purposes, $47.26.

As this Conference was apportioned 40 per cent of the two million dollars' financial goal of the Men and Millions Forward Movement, we submit herewith certain interesting facts, prepared by the chairman of this committee.

The financial goals were set at $2,000,000, apportioned as follows:

Special mission fund, already raised..	$ 125,000.00
Elon standardization fund, raised....	375,000.00
From regular sources, including Conference apportionments, missionary association, woman's missionary societies, and for the Orphanage....	250,000.00
For Church extenison, to be raised in the local Churches, expended there, and reported to the annual Conferences	500,000.00
New money in this campaign to be subscribed during consecration week	750,000.00
Total	$2,000,000.00

These quotas were based on $80.00 from every member.

The money was subscribed as follows:

Special mission campaign	$ 128,000.00
Elon standardization fund	381,600.00
From regular sources (to come in annually)	250,000.00
For Church extension (to be reported annually)	500,000.00
Men and Millions	533,911.70
Total	$1,793,511.70

The total amount subscribed lacked $206,488.30 of being $2,000,000, and the shortage was in the Men and Millions Fund. This Conference had a Men and Millions quota of $278,261, and subscribed $290,486, making an oversubscription of $12,225.

Collections to October 1, 1924, are as follows:

Special missions, 66%	$ 84,523.42
Elon standardization, 56%	213,227.08
Benevolences, regular sources, 1920-1923 inclusive, 80%	201,475.00
Church extension, 1920-1923 inclusive, 108%	541,795.39
Men and Millions, 23%	123,472.56
Total, 65%	$1,164,493.45
Add Elon emergency	385,223.23
Grand total, 77%	$1,549,716.68

	Apportionment.	Collected.
Special missions	$ 61,089.00	$ 42,262.00
Elon standardization	160,650.00	106,113.00
Benevolences, regular sources	100,000.00	112,925.00
Church extension, 1920-1923 inclusive	200,000.00	409,052.00
Men and Millions	278,261.00	76,515.00
93 1-3%	$800,000.00	$746,867.00
Add Elon emergency		125,000.00
Grand total 109%		$871,867.00

This Conference has collected for Men and Millions fund 27 per cent of its quota and 26 per cent of its subscription. To complete our full quota, there must be collected $201,746, which is the most urgent and vital problem pressing for solution at this session. The Mission Board has borrowed heavily to keep the work going, is facing a large deficit, and invites your full co-operation and sincere prayers in a strong effort to collect this amount by December 31, 1925.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

November 16, 1924.

Subject: "Peter's Confession."

Golden Text: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God."—Matt. 16:16.

Lesson: Matt. 16:13-20.

Reference Material: Mark 8:27-29; Luke 9:18-20.

"Who do men say that I am?" The question was asked by the Master nineteen centuries ago. And it was not curiosity that prompted it, either. The Master was not given to idle talk at any time, and least of all when so much was at stake. He asked the question because He was concerned about what men thought about Him. He knew that it did make a difference in men's lives as to what they thought of Him.

The reply of the disciples is interesting and suggestive. Men thought that Jesus was one of the prophets of other days, perchance John the Baptist—Herod thought this—Elijah, Jeremiah, or some other prophet. They knew that He was one of Israel's greatest men. And the answer reflects not only the vagueness of their thinking, but the greatness of His character and its many-sided beauty and wonder. For there was as much difference between Jeremiah and Elijah as between day and night. Like diamonds, the Master's character shone forth in new beauty from every angle.

"But who say ye that I am?" Here is a personal, pointed and pertinent question. It was not enough to know what men thought of Jesus; the supreme thing was what the disciples as individuals thought of Him. Religion, for the Master, was largely interpreted in terms of a personal relationship, and He would know the personal belief of His disciples. What other men thought about Him would have little, if any, influence on their lives; what they themselves thought about Him would have all influence on their lives.

"Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," said Peter, with his characteristic enthusiasm. He answered even better than he knew. And Jesus frankly told him that it was the spirit of the Father Himself which had disclosed this vital truth to him. And upon this confession, upon this recognition of Jesus Christ as the divine Son of God—for this is the interpretation which the writer gives Christ's works—would Jesus build His Church. And even the gates of hell would not prevail against a Church so builded. And to such a man, there would be granted that insight into moral and religious life that he would speak with authority, binding and loosing by his words.

The question, "Who do men say that I am?" has been asked throughout the centuries. And even more varied than in the original case have been the answers. Some—a small number—say that Jesus was the illigitimate son of Mary and Joseph; others say that He was a great man and a great teacher; still others say that he was a prophet of God, mighty in word and in deed, but, after all, just a man; and others, with Simon Peter, recognize in Him the Christ, the Son of the living God. Every man is entitled to his own view, of course, but there is one indisputable fact which ought to command the attention of thoughtful men—the group of Christians which have held to the divinity of Jesus Christ, those who have acclaimed Him as the Son of the living God, have most profoundly influenced human life, and have had a gospel that had a redeeming power that any of the other groups have not and, in the nature of things, cannot have.

History affirms this truth, and personal experience confirms it. A study of the history of the Church shows that the sections of the Church which have proclaimed and emphasized the divinity of Christ have shown more vitality and more expansive power. And personal experience attests to the fact that it is Jesus Christ, as the Son of the living God, who offers forgiveness and peace and power to those who are conscious of their deeper needs.

And as in the case of the disciples, the nub of the whole matter for us is what we individually and personally think of Jesus Christ. Our ideals of life, our standard of conduct, our whole philosophy of life will be determined by our answer to Christ's question, "What think ye of Christ?" Let every man take heed unto himself how he answers that question.

Some Teaching Points.

1. It does make a difference what men believe.
2. Jesus Christ cares what men think of Him.
3. Jesus Christ was many-sided in the qualities of Christian character.
4. The vital thing is not what others think of Christ, but what I think of Him.
5. Happy is the man to whom the spirit of God reveals Jesus Christ as the Son of God.
6. Jesus Christ is the foundation of the Church.
7. The Church, made up of men who believe in the divinity of Jesus Christ, shall prevail.
8. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned.
9. The Holy Spirit will guide us into all truth.

FRANKLINTON.

Our Christian Church is doing a very fine piece of constructive work for our colored constituency and membership in erecting at Christian College, Franklinton, N. C., a very commodious and attractive fire-proof dormitory. The building, when finished, is to cost approximately $40,000, and the building committee feels that it is receiving full values for the amount expended.

Under the guiding genius of Mr. Frank B. Simpson, architect, Raleigh, N. C., a fire-proof structure of brick and concrete, two stories high, and containing thirty-two rooms, is being built in a style and with a degree of efficiency and permanency that we feel will appeal to the praiseworthy pride of all our people. Thus far we have had to house in one central building our boarding students and our class and lecture rooms. The building now going up is to be used for a girl's dormitory with the exception of two large rooms on the east end of the first floor for recitation rooms, and one room at the main entrance of the building for administrative purposes. The building is being equipped with all modern conveniences of light, water and sanitation.

President J. A. Henderson, who is a native North Carolinian and a fine product of his race, is proving himself a most worthy president, a capable executive, a competent manager and an exact accountant. It was a happy day indeed for the board of control when Rev. J. A. Henderson, of Warren County, N. C., was elected president of Franklin. Two years of successful administration have justified the board of control in their hopes and expectations of him.

Rev. D. A. Long, who resides at Franklinton, teaches the Bible class in Christian College without compensation, and renders brotherly and scholarly aid in carrying on the work for our people at Christian College. Dr. Long is a real friend to the college and to the race which he has done so much to help instruct and elevate through many years.

Franklinton now needs funds to complete the building in progress, and if any of our readers have any contributions that they can spare for Christian service, we know of no worthier place it could be invested than at Christian College, Franklinton. Dr. Omer S. Thomas, Dayton, Ohio, is treasurer of the board of control, and President J. A. Henderson, Franklinton, N. C., is also financial agent, and either will send receipts or gladly acknowledge any amount that may be contributed. The object of these lines was not primarily to solicit, but to let our people generally know of the fine work that is being done at Franklinton, and especially of the splendid building that is being erected now. The building will certainly be a credit, not only to the college, but to the denomination. A friend and a helper to Franklinton now is a friend and a helper to the whole Church.

J. O. Atkinson,
Secretary of Board of Control.

THINK ON THESE FACTS.

Statistics are dull and dry, we are often told. Statistics are sometimes, however, wonderfully challenging. The interpretation of statistics is a highly profitable enterprise, but we should be sure our interpretaiton is right. For a skillful manipulator can prove anything by statistics, just as he can by the Bible.

We herewith print some vital statistics, without interpretation. We print them as food for thought, with the hope that each reader will exercise that right of private interpretation guaranteed him by our beloved Church, and with the further hope that thought will issue in becoming action for himself and those dependent upon him.

Fact Number One.

Respecting every one hundred men aged twenty-five today, after forty years the following facts will be recorded:

Dead	36
Objects of charity	54
Able to support themselves	5
Well-to-do	4
Rich	1

Fact Number Two.

Respecting every one thousand children this year entering the public schools of America, sixteen years from now the following facts will be true:

Finished grammar school	400
Finished high school	111
Entered college	38
Graduated from college	14

Fact Number Three.

College graduates constitute but 1.4 per cent of our population. They furnish 85 per cent of our nation's leadership. Four years in college give a man six thousand times as many chances of serving his generation in a constructive way.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

In the fall of the year, after the year's work is nearly done, when we look back over the months gone by and realize how good God has been to us and the many blessings He has bestowed upon us, it is a time to be happy and to have a heart full of joy and thankfulness. It is a time when we want everybody to be happy. It is a time to bring forth the tithes of our increase and lay it up, that the stranger, the widow and the fatherless may come and eat and be satisfied. When your Church makes its Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage, the amount you give will help feed the fatherless, it will help relieve the widow in her distress, it will bring joy and happiness to one hundred and thirteen children in your Orphanage. It will fill your soul with an abiding peace.

I want to ask you to remember the children in your Orphanage who need your help, your sympathy and your love. I ask you to remember the seventy-five who are pleading for a home in your Orphanage. Pray that means may be provided for them. Back your prayers up with an open hand and a warm heart and see to it that your Church makes a large offering for your Orphanage. We are counting on you and your Church.

COMMITTEE ON MEMORIALS MEETS.

The committee appointed at the late session of the Southern Christian Convention, in session at Norfolk, Va., to look into the matter of placing a suitable marker on the site of Old Lebanon, in Surry County, Va., and of having a suitable marker for the memory of Rev. James O'Kelly, the first leader of the Christian Church in the South, met in the pastor's study of the Suffolk Christian Church at 8 o'clock P. M. and was called to order by Judge J. F. West, the chairman.

Present: Judge J. F. West, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and W. E. MacClenny, and Dr. W. W. Staley, who was present, was asked to sit with the committee in an advisory capacity.

In the absence of Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, the standing secretary, W. E. MacClenny was asked to act at this meeting, and Dr. W. W. Staley was asked to sit with the committee in the session in the absence of Rev. S. C. Harrell.

Judge J. F. West then produced a plat, or map, of the site of the Old Lebanon lot as made by a surveyor, and he told how the land had been laid off and bargained to be sold, excepting a plot large enough for the marker. It was then agreed that this committee recommend to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in its next session at Norfolk, that the said Conference authorize the trustees, recently appointed, to institute proceedings before the judge of the Circuit Court of Surry County, Va., and to get the proper order from the said court for the said trustees to sell all of the Old Lebanon lot in the said county, excepting a small plot reserved for a site for a monument or marker.

Dr. W. W. Staley then presented some estimates and plans for a monument or marker to be erected on the site of Lebanon Church lot.

It was the consensus of opinion that the monument selected be of Vermont marble, and that on the top of this monument be the figure of an open Bible, and that the wording be put on a bronze tablet on the front of the said monument just under the Bible, and the committee is to look into the cost of monument of Vermont marble six feet high above the ground and report to the next meeting. It was thought more fitting to have the monument slightly inclined on the top, so the open Bible would show up to better advantage. It was also asked to get estimates on a concrete walk, five feet wide, from the State highway, which passes through the lot, to the concrete base at the foot of the monument, this concrete base to extend ten feet around the monument; and also for four granite corner-posts. It was decided that the concrete under the monument should be at least three feet thick. Dr. W. W. Staley and Mr. J. M. Darden were asked to get this data for the committee. It was then moved that Judge J. F. West get estimates from some Petersburg firm to do this work, and to make a bid for the job on the above basis.

In regard to the memorial for the Rev. James O'Kelly, it was then moved that this memorial, with the consent of the trustees of Elon College, be placed around Elon College, either on the campus or in one of the buildings. It was then decided to try to get estimates for a statue of Rev. James O'Kelly to cost about one thousand dollars. This estimate was left to be gotten by Drs. J. O. Atkinson and W. A. Harper, they to report at the next meeting of this committee.

It was then moved and carried that Judge J. F. West call a meeting of this committee at the coming session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference on Wednesday at 9 o'clock A. M., October 29, 1924.

It was then moved and carried that we adjourn.

W. E. MACCLENNY,
Suffolk, Va. Secretary Pro Tem.

FAMILY ALTAR

CONDUCTED BY REV. H. E. ROUNTREE,
Our Chaplain in the United States Navy.

MONDAY.

A HOME IS MORE THAN MERE ELEGANCE OF SURROUNDINGS.

Do not grumble because your circumstances will not permit you to live in a more pretentious house in a desirable location and surrounded by spacious grounds. Often those occupying such homes experience but little real enjoyment. It costs more to keep them running. It takes more work to keep the interior in order and the premises trim.

Your humble home, just large enough to be cared for by you and which you can keep homey and comfortable with no great effort is much more to be desired than the larger house, the operation of which is a constant source of expense and annoyance and close figuring to meet its financial upkeep.

Often the ones you envy would gladly change places with you, if thereby they could experience peace, comfort and relief from the many demands of their more expensive place. Fine premises alone do not make a happy home.

A united spirit and a feeling of equality in partnership are what is needed to make a happy home and not mere elegance of surroundings. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

TUESDAY.

A LIVING SACRIFICE.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice."—Rom. 12:1-2.

Paul was writing to men and women who had but recently embraced a new faith, and this faith called for a standard of living that was alien from the lives of those about them. In the midst of an atmosphere of foulness in those ancient cities, these Christians had to live lives of spotless purity and elevation of character. Wonderful to relate, they did so live.

The word "bodies" here is equivalent to the term "members" in the sixth chapter of Romans, and this means that we must use all our members in the service of God. It is through our bodies that we have contact with the world about us. This exhortation is really most searching, when we recognize its inwardness. It means the hands to be restrained from doing wrong, the ears from hearing, the mouth from speaking it. Our body thus becomes the instrument of training in restraint and control, and also the opportunity of service to others. The soul may speak through the body, or the body may master the soul. The body is the battlefield of the soul.

What an exaltation of the body comes to us when we think of it as a living sacrifice made to God! There is nothing greater that we can offer to God than consecrated living. An increase of genuinely godly living would do more for God and the cause of religion than any other factor. We serve by being. Therefore, offer your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God. —Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—That we may realize the importance of dedicating our lives to God, and seeking daily for divine guidance in pure, holy and helpful Christian living.

WEDNESDAY.

THE VALUE OF THE SOUL.

"For what shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" —Mark 8:36-37.

These are some questions that need no answers, for they are answered in the very asking. This is true of the questions Jesus asked about the soul. We are all worth more than perhaps some of us thought we were. Because we have souls, there is more danger of underestimating than overestimating ourselves. If we placed a higher estimate upon our souls and could rightly value and appreciate them, how could we afford to endanger the loss by living worldly lives? Just think of it! A soul is worth more than all the world. My soul! Your soul! And there is a reason why God puts such an estimate upon it. It is more precious than the world, and will outlive it. Heaven and earth may pass away, but the soul will live on. And yet it may be lost. It may be lost by exchanging. There are plenty of good things we may enjoy and keep our souls; there are questionable things, too, we may have, but only in exchange for our souls.

Prayer.—Dear Father, we thank Thee for the hope of living forever with Thee. Help us to keep that which Thou has committed unto us unto that day. In Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

"And it came to pass, that He went through the cornfields."—Mark 2:23-28.

It was the time of the second picking on a cotton plantation. The sun was setting, but the "hands" remained on at work, for the time was short and rain threatened. From the cotton there came the strains of singing, soft and clear as the tinkling of a silver bell.

"I'll soon be at home ober dere, ober dere; I'll soon be at home ober dere."

We came upon the singer in a little while. Stooped was she with years and gray; but in her eyes and on her dark face was the light of heaven.

"Aunt" Hattie knows God better than most of us. "I'm happy," said she in her quaint dialect; "I'm happy 'cause de Lord God is right down yer in dis cotton fiel'. Don't de Book say dat de Lord walked through de corn fiel's wif His disciples? An' don't hit say dat He am de same yesterday, today and fo'eber? Ah, honey, you ain't gwine ter be happy till ye knows dat de Lord am in de cotton fiel' wif you an' in de kitchen an' in de woods. He's interested now jes like He was den. Yea, He's in de cotton fiel' now. So I'se happy!" —Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

HEAVEN.

"Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you before the foundation of the world."

What is the kingdom prepared for us? Though not a great deal is revealed, there is enough to assure of its verity. Jesus said: "This day thou shall be with me in paradise." "In my Father's house are many mansions." "I go to prepare a place for you." "Because I live, ye shall live." It is through His spirit that we, like Paul, receive the fact of heaven. Our text is the invitation into heaven for faithful service. It no doubt will be the perfection of our ideals and all that God is. We shall enter upon it with the same sense and ease and security and possession that a new-born child accepts his surroundings. It will be beautiful and wonderful, and familiar and dear, our own place and the satisfaction of our own love.

God is the natural home of the soul here on earth, growing in His grace, living in Him, nurtured by His care, fed by His bounty, watched by His grace, guarded by His mercy, kept by His love. Loving Him with our own might and soul; then to pass on and find that all peace and rest and blessedness is complete—that is the design and blessed end of our existence.

Prayer.—Our Father, only in Thee do we find what we require. Protect us from every evil, and keep us on our journey, receive us at last into Thy enfolding love and set us in royal state partakers of Thy fullness forever.—Amen.

SATURDAY.

SPIRITUAL DECLINE AND REFRESHING.

"For the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall be their shepherd, and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life."—Rev. 7:17.

When the streams run dry we begin to inquire about their sources—what has happened to the springs in the hills from which they flow? Have they been diverted into other channels? Have the rains ceased on the mountaintops? So when the drought of spiritual influence seems to fall upon our work, we must look to it that the springs are replenished. This need, Christ foresaw, and He has prescribed the remedy. The life of our souls flows from the life of Christ Himself, as the fruit-bearing of the vine branch depends upon the sap that rises in the root-stock. The usual cause of drought in the life of the Church is our separation from the life and the power of Christ.

Prayer.—Our Father, send Thy holy spirit upon us this day to cheer our dull and deadened hearts, release us from the burden of sin, and refresh our souls with quiet, peace and rest. In His name. Amen.

SUNDAY.

"KNOWING" AND "DOING."

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them!"—John 13:15-17.

This is a plea for knowledge which issues in activity. "To know" and "to do"—that is the road to real achievement and happiness. To know what to do and to know how to do it. To dream and to do—to hitch the vision to the task —that is idealism and realism, the blessed combination that brings in the kingdom of heaven on earth.

To dream and not do is not practical. To try to do without the vision is not efficient. Emerson said, "Hitch your wagon to the star." There are many kinds of stars. The Star of Bethlehem is the Star we recommend. Having hitched your wagon to the Star of Bethlehem, there is one other thing to do. Hitch your Star to your wagon. Hitch your wagon to the star—that is ideality; have ideals! Hitch your star to the wagon —that is idealism; make the star do your work!

Catch something of the infinite glory and concrete it to every-day life. Be ideal and be real. Be real and be ideal. That is leadership. That is Christianity.—Rev. Richard Braunstein.

Prayer.—That with Jesus as our great model, and with a sincere desire to walk "In His Steps," we may undertake confidently any task.

WAS THERE EVER SUCH CONTRAST?

Practically all the nations of the world have been sitting at Geneva for two months earnestly trying to find a way "to outlaw war"—to quote their own words. It is perhaps the most significant thing in international affairs that has ever happened in the whole history of the world. It is infinitely more significant than the great war or any war that ever was. Our own nation would have rendered greater service to the world by being present at Geneva during September and October than it rendered by participation in the war. The outcome of the war was largely chaos and confusion; the outcome at Geneva was at least a first step toward building a new world order based on Christian ideals.

We were not there; but that is not the worst of it. We, as a government—not as a people—were not only not there, but we were talking in the old war terms while the other nations were talking in the new peace teams. We were discussing preparation for war while the rest of the world was together talking preparation for peace. Was there ever such contrast in all history? And was there ever such irony? For the movement to substitute arbitration for war has been an American movement. For fifty years we have talked it and we largely gave it to the world. The movement for a world court is largely an American movement. Our prophets and statesmen have been urging it upon the world for a century. The movement for parliaments of nations and world organization has been pre-eminently an American movement. America even gave the present famliy of nations to the world. The movement for disarmament has received almost all its impetus from America. And now some strange thing has happened. While the whole world has been for the first time, officially, as governments, trying to build these things into a new world order, we have not only as a government held contemptuously aloof, but we have been repudiating all these things, and acting toward the future as though no wonders were being wrought, as though no new world was being born. On the day the protocol outlawing war was signed, our government took absolutely no notice of it. Not one word came from Washington. One would have thought our President or our Secretary of State would have at least cabled a word congratulating the nations of the world on having taken a step which, up to the last years, we have been working and praying for.

To come back to the contrasts, just when Ramsay MacDonald, speaking for Great Britain, and Premier Herriot, speaking for France, were urging in addresses that stirred the whole world that the nations sign a protocol agreeing to substitute arbitration for war, we were talking preparation for war, and the whole nation, under the sanction of the government, was trying out its strength at arms, engaging in rehearsal for war, indulging in mimic battles and practicing the goose-step. On this day when these statesmen were talking in terms of peace, we were talking militarism. Some of our readers will say that mobilization day had nothing to do with militarism. This is all bunkum! We have collected from every source we could the addresses delivered on that day, and the majority of them are simply pleas to be ready for war, if not actual glorification of war. The point is, we were talking readiness for war while the rest of the world at Geneva was talking readiness for peace. About the most militaristic utterances we have read for years, excepting the fire-eating address of Admiral Rodgers, at Williamstown, where he said we might even want to engage in aggressive warfare some time, is a sermon on the meaning of mobilization day, by the chief of chaplains in the United States Army, Mr. Acton. It is the most disheartening thing we have seen since the war, coming from a Christian minister. We are glad it has been repudiated far and wide. But here is a man speaking as a government official, dwelling upon the inevitability of war while the officials of other nations are talking of the inevitability of peace. Chaplain Acton reminds us that civilization is "wrought out by conflict." Mr. MacDonald and the heads of all the other nations were reminding us that it is wrought out by co-operation. Chaplain Acton was defending force; the statesmen at Geneva were defending conference and goodwill. Chaplain Acton had nothing to offer us in his sermon—neither did any of the other mobilization day addresses we have seen—but guns as defense; the speakers at Geneva were offering world courts and arbitration treaties. All over the nation, on September 10th, hundreds of speakers were telling our boys and girls that preparedness rested on guns and gas, airships and navies; Geneva was telling the world on the same day that preparedness rested on Christian confidence, trust, conference and the sense of oneness in all nations. Our speakers were urging increased armies and navies; the speakers at Geneva were urging the increase of arbitration, judicial and other Christian machinery.

In the matter of armament, the contrast is just as marked. The statesmen at Geneva, after signing the protocol wherein they agree to arbitrate all differences, immediately expressed themselves upon national defense. Thy, with wonderful unanimity of utterance, began to talk of disarmament and lay plans for defense by mutual co-operation, processes of justice and methods of law. Force was to be reduced simply to police proportions. In other words, they were outlawing war among the nations as we have outlawed it among ourselves as individuals, and they were planning to protect the nations against the criminal nation just as we protect the community from the criminal man. Now note the contrast. While they were talking this new language, Admiral Rodgers was addressing the nation from Williamstown on the necessity of building up vast armaments, and Secretary of the Navy Wilbur was telling the nation, through a broadcasted speech at San Francisco, how the next naval battle would be fought, and how we ought to be preparing for it. The speech never once betrayed the slightest consideration that Geneva was building a new world or that anything but war awaited us in the future. He ended his speech with these words (put them beside the words from Geneva): "There is nothing so cooling to a hot temper as a piece of cold steel. There is nothing so conducive to calm and cool deliberation as the contemplation of adequate means of defense by our opponent."

While the delegates from the other nations of the world were hearing of the new instruments of peace—the World Court, simultaneous limitation of armaments, the outlawing of war and substitution of judicial methods for guns and gas—our chief of army ordnance, Major-General C. O. Williams, was telling the people, speaking at Philadelphia, and telling them evidently with great enthusiasm, and with lantern slides, of the terrible inventions for warfare and national defense. The New York reporter says in his rather full account of the lecture: "A crowd that filled the room to capacity fairly gasped at some of the possibilities held forth by these powerful engines of war." No wonder they gasped! There is one whole column containing simply a list of the most horrible death-dealing instruments our government is perfecting for slaughter of our fellowmen. It ends thus: "The modern aerial bombs are now approximately six times more explosive and destructive than those dropped on London and other English cities during the Zeppelin raids of the war." We cannot as a government take part in making the new world at Geneva, but we can go on making the terrible things Major-General Williams described as being perfected by our government! This is America's contribution to the peace of the world!

Well, we are at a great turning point in human history, in spite of our nation refusing to turn with the rest of the world. They will go on their way even though we insist in walking the old way alone. When the nations came together at Geneva on September 1st it was the accepted doctrine that any nation had a right to go to war when it wished and for whatever it wished to attain, and no other nation had a right to interfere. On October 1st, one month later, the accepted principle is "that an aggressor state is an outlaw among nations; that other States may proceed to the chastisement of the aggressor or take steps to prevent the menace of oppression from becoming real, without themselves becoming parties to a conflict." For the first time in human history, international affairs are on a Christian basis. The New York Times says: "This great event has passed almost unnoticed in this country, which in past years has so largely contributed to its dominant and underlying ideas. It is a strange paradox that those countries which have been accused freely in the American press of tendencies of imperialism and militarism should have led in this great step toward the elimination of aggressive war and world disarmament, rather than this reputed home of idealism."

Yet we gave this great ideal to the nations, and even the constitution of this new world was drawn up largely by Americans, for which let us be thankful. We do not believe that America has lost her idealism forever, nor do we believe that she shall long be content to walk in the old ways of guns for sole defense of the nation. Neither do we believe that she will long cling to the old pagan doctrine, held by every nation September 1st, of the right of the nation to make war when it pleases. There were those once who said the individual had the right to fight another when he pleased. But they finally were overborne by the enlightened sentiment of humanity. We are the one nation now refusing to join the other nations of the world in the effort to outlaw war on this same basis; we insist on the right to make war when we please. The other nations on October 1st rose out of this doctrine forever. Our nation will some time yield to the enlightened sentiment of the world, as did the individual.—F. L., in Christian Work.

NOTICE TO DELEGATES.

All Churches of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, please take notice that the next session of the above Conference will meet at Apples Chapel Church November 11, 12, 13, 1924, and you are asked to please elect your delegates at your earliest convenience and send their names and how they expect to come to D. E. Michael, McLeansville, N. C.

Those who care to, can reach the Church by auto, it being on a sand-clay road, between Gibsonville and Reidsville, and those who come by train will be met at Brown Summit and Gibsonville. See that your Church is represented, for a cordial welcome awaits you.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR KIDDIES:

Did you like the first part of "Old Witch Neda?" Well, here is Part No. II, and I hope you will like it also.

Let's hear from some of the Kiddies. Don't make your editor do all of the work. Write and tell about the trip you took, or your baby chicks, or—oh, lots of things. If you can't write yet, tell mother what to say—but be sure to send a letter to YOUR EDITOR.

OLD WITCH NEDA.

PART II.

By Abbie Phillips Walker.

"Something must be done, and done at once," said one star. "If we let that old witch have the Sun and Moon, no knowing what will become of us."

"But what can we do?" asked another star. "Here we are up here in the sky, and Old Neda's house is on the top of a mountain. Besides that, she will keep a close watch over them, you may be sure. What can we do, and what will become of us?"

"One of us must go down there and let them out," said the first star. "Now, which one of us will go? That is the first thing to settle."

No one answered for a minute, and then a very little Star said, timidly: "I am willing to go, but I am so small I do not suppose I could do any good."

"You are the very one to go, just because you are small," said the first Star. "And now I will tell you how it can be done. Old Witch Neda will be up here tonight, you may be sure, because she is happy now that she has the Sun and Moon, and wants to see how unhappy we are.

"When she comes tonight, we must make a great fuss and cry because we are so upset, not knowing when it is night or day, and beg her to help us. She will fly around close to us, and when she is very near Little Star we must wail and cry and attract her attention, and then Little Star must jump on the broomstick right behind Old Witch Neda—"

"Oh! oh! oh!" said all the Stars; "oh! oh! oh!" for they were afraid of Old Neda. But Little Star did not cry out; she just winked and blinked and listened to what the first Star said.

"As I said," continued the first Star, "Little Star must jump on the broomstick right behind Old Witch Neda and then close her eyes until Old Neda comes to her house on the top of the mountain.

"Of course, she can only take just one look then, just to see where the Old Witch goes, and the Little Star must stay very still until Old Neda goes to bed, for she usually sleeps in the daytime.

"When all is still and you are sure Old Witch Neda sleeps, then you must go about very carefully and quietly until you find the closet where the Sun and Moon are kept prisoner, and unlock the door."

"But what good will that do?" asked one Star. "They will be out of the closet, but how will they ever get back to their places in the sky? The Old Witch will never bring them, of course."

"Wait, my dear sister, and I will tell you even how that can be managed," said the first Star.

"After you have released the Sun and Moon, Little Star, you must hurry to the place where the Old Witch keeps her magic broomstick, and jump on it. Smooth it three times one way and then three times in the opposite direction, and it will obey you. You must be careful, however, to smooth it but one way until you have the Sun and Moon safely on it with you. But—hush! hush! here comes Old Witch Neda."

Old Witch Neda cackled and chuckled when she heard the wailing and crying the Stars were making over the loss of the Sun and Moon.

"Oh, give them back to us; give them back to us!" they cried. "We will never be rude to you again, even when you pull off our veils."

"Ah-ha!" said the Old Witch, laughing loudly. "I guess you won't be rude to me, my silly little Stars, for I intend to keep the old Moon and Sun locked in my closet and make you shine all the time until you are so sleepy you fall out of the sky. Ha-ha-ha!"

"Oh! oh! oh!" cried the Stars all together, and Old Neda flew close to them to better see how they suffered, and then Little Star did as the first Star had told her to do, and the next instant she was flying along with Old Witch Neda toward her house on the top of the mountain.

Little Star looked just once and saw Old Neda go into the house. Then she closed her eyes and waited until she was sure the Witch was asleep.

Very, very carefully she opened the door and slipped in. Then she looked around, and from under a door she saw a very bright light and knew that behind that door were the Sun and Moon.

The key was in the door, and it took only a second to turn it. "Hush!" said Little Star; "I have come to release you. Do not make a sound, but follow me."

"Little Star took from a chair Old Witch Neda's big black cape and threw it over the Sun and Moon, so their bright light might not awaken the Old Witch, and in another minute they were all sitting on the broomstick while Little Star smoothed it three times one way and three times the other, and then said: "Off to the sky. Take us home, good broomstick."

Away they flew, and in a short time the Sun was shining in the sky just as if nothing had happened to him, and the Stars went to sleep and slept soundly, they were so tired.

Little Star, that night, took her place in the sky very quietly, but the other Stars wanted to know all about her adventure.

"Oh, I just did as the first Star told me," modestly replied the Little Star, "and brought back the Sun and Moon—that was all."

"You were a brave Little Star," said the first Star, "and as a reward, the broomstick of the Old Witch has been made into Stars, which is to be made into a big cross, and in this cross forever shall you shine, and you will take on more brightness than any of us—brave, brave Little Star."

Of course, the Old Witch, having lost her broomstick, could not bother the Stars any more, so they shone and twinkled happily on, always feeling grateful to Little Star for helping them out of their great trouble.

THE SPONGE THAT KEPT HIS PROMISE.

He was the littlest sponge of them all, and he loved his mother dearly; yet it was a proud day when he floated away with all the other little sponges. How proud the mother was of them, these tiny, soft sponges that floated gently away through the clear, still water deep down in the great ocean. For baby sponges set out in the world at once for themselves, till they come to a good-looking place, then they simply settled down and grow there for keeps. They never see their dear mother again like little girls and boys do.

Although this littlest sponge was very proud to go sailing away out into the great ocean, he was very sorry to leave his dear mother.

"I'll come back some day," he called to her; but mother sponge smiled sadly, for well she knew that soon the precious babies would all be growing tight to some rock far from her.

On and on these babies rode through the green water, past all the neighbor sponges, through a school of tiny fishes, on through the deep, still water where rocks were larger than any they had ever seen before.

"I'm tired," said one of them. "I'm going to rest awhile on this nice white rock; I can easily catch up with the rest of you if you go slowly."

But he never caught up, for he never got up. The stone held him fast, and the soft, lacy edges of him grew tough and clung so fast he could not pull loose.

"Oh, well," he said, "this isn't so bad, it might have been worse." Which, after all, is a very good way to look at trouble.

The other babies finally got tired swimming around waiting for him, and decided to rest on the pretty clean rocks they were passing. And they, too, stayed where they landed.

It was the littlest spongs of them all who chose the prettiest rock. It was round-shaped and marked all over with the prettiest markings, giving it a panel effect. And the littlest sponge surely needed a place to cling, for after a while he felt a shiver run through the rock.

Up around the edges of the rock appeared six funny waving things that paddled along, taking the rock and the littlest sponge with it. Four of the paddles had sharp claws, one was simply pointed at the end and stuck straight up, while the one in front had two little eyes that saw everything. Yes, you have guessed it. The little sponge was growing fast to the back of a turtle!

"Good-by," he shouted to the rest as he rode away, "I'm going back to visit mother."

How surprised mother sponge was, for she never dreamed of seeing any of her babies again. And she loved the littlest sponge more than ever because he kept his promise.—Ann Robinson, in Zion's Herald.

HEALTH HINTS FOR THE KIDDIES.

Birds of a feather flock together,
And so do pigs and swine!
So I must scrub my hands and face
Or I may with them dine!

Handy Spandy Jack-a-Dandy
Loves to lunch all day on candy;
He cries and whines—'tis plain to see
A peevish "Kandy Kid" is he.

Hey, diddle, dinkety, poppety pet,
The moo-cow is waiting
For the milk maid yet!
Ring the bells, and waken her—
Knock upon her door:
All the Juniors want their milk,
A foaming pint or more.

MY SISTER.

I have a little sister,
The cutest little thing;
She kicks her heels and cries
When Mother starts to sing.

She's like a record, Daddy says—
She talks till she runs down,
And then goes quickly off to sleep
In By-law Town.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father to call to His eternal reward our brother-worker and sexton of Union Grove Christian Church, Bro. E. H. Bird; therefore, it seems pleasing to our Heavenly Father that we, who were active associates with him in life, should express our esteem of him in death; that his life among, and his service with, us has left us a good example of loyalty and devotion to his Church and to his home. Be it resolved:

First, That, in the death of Bro. Bird, the Church has lost a true, Christian worker, a devout and loyal member, ever faithful to his Church.

Second, That while we cherish the memory of him, we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He doeth all things well.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and also to The Christian Sun, the Randolph Tribune and the Courier for publication, and recorded on the Church record.

FORTEBEE

An External Treatment FOR TUBERCULOSIS

It is a great discovery. Here's what W. T. Woolfolk, Richmond, Va., says: "About eleven years ago, I developed active tuberculosis in both lungs. I went to Colorado twice, and stayed there about three years, but without relief. About six years ago I used a bottle of FORTEBEE, and within three days I was greatly improved, and in three months I was perfectly well and have enjoyed excellent health ever since. FORTEBEE is the greatest treatment for tuberculosis I have ever seen or heard of. It saved my life."

This was received from Veanie McGhee, Ellerson, Va.: "Since using FORTEBEE, I have good appetite, all pains are gone and I feel like a new person. My left lung was bad, and FORTEBEE healed it. Through the use of this remedy, I am glad to tell others about it."

This is a letter received from M. E. Gordon, Richmond, Va.: "A friend brought me a bottle of FORTEBEE. The first application was put on my chest, and for the first time in many weeks I could breathe freely without the catch in my side. After several applications, the pleurisy pains were pulled and then ceased entirely. Now, I am again at work, feeling stronger every day. It is a privilege to tell you the good FORTEBEE has done me."

Treat yourself at home by following the directions closely. People in all parts of the country are now ordering. Price per bottle, $2.50. Order direct from—

MARTZ.

Lydia Anne Martz was born July 20, 1838, and died September 22, 1924, aged 86 years, 2 months, and 2 days. Sister Martz was a faithful member of the Bethlehem Christian Church, was well known by a host of friends, and was highly esteemed by them all. She possessed a sunny disposition, and usually bore up remarkably well, in spite of the many afflictions through which the family has passed during the last few years. Surviving are two daughters, both at home.

Funeral services were held at the home near Lacey Spring, September 24th, and interment made in the family burying-ground nearby. A. W. ANDES.

PAYNE.

Daniel Lemuel Payne, of Linville, Va., died almost suddenly of apoplexy at the hospital in Harrisonburg early Sunday morning, October 12, 1924. His age was forty-seven years, two months and one day. He is survived by his mother, one brother and three sisters.

He was held in high esteem by all who knew him. His character and conduct were spotless. He was a real friend to Linville Christian Church, and deeply devoted to his widowed mother, brother and sister.

Funeral services were held and the interment made at the Linville Christian Church on Monday, October 13th. The writer of these lines officiated. May a compassionate Father comfort the bereaved family.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

HITT.

William F. Hitt was born February 4, 1836, and died September 30, 1924, at the age of 88 years, 7 months and 26 days. Death occurred at the home of a daughter at Shenandoah, though most of his life was spent at Newport. About fifty-three years ago he united with the Newport Christian Church, later transferring his membership to the Dunkard Church. He leaves ten children, fifty grandchildren, and many friends to mourn his departure.

FURGERSON.

Bro. S. W. Furgerson died August 9, 1924, in his sixty-fourth year. He leaves a widow and two children—M. S. Furgerson and Mrs. Dora Williams. Bro. Furgerson said that he was ready to go.

Funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Elisha Bradshaw.

Fosdick to Complete Church Year.—

In accordance with an earnest request from the First Presbyterian Church of New York City, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick will remain with that Church until the close of its Church year, which comes at the end of March. Dr. Fosdick resigned early in October because he was unwilling to comply with the demand of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church and subscribe to the Westminster creed.

Ontario Remains Dry.—

By a 50,000 majority in the election held in Ontario, Canada, on October 23d, the province remains dry. It was the rural population which swung the balance against the cities demanding the sale of liquor under government control. Ontario is now the only Canadian province remaining absolutely dry. Before the election, the wets were sure of victory. The lack of confidence on the part of the drys probably spurred them on to victory.

Purchase Mission Field.—

The United Lutheran Church has voted recently to purchase the entire mission work of the Berlin Missionary Society in the Shantung Province, China. The purchase price is $185,000, to be paid in ten annual installments. It is one of the many readjustments made necessary by the war. It is a rare thing for a Church to purchase a mission field. Few of us would consider mission fields articles of merchandise. The United Lutheran Church also voted to erect a college in Delegu, India. They have 106,000 members in India.

The interest which the Lutheran Church is manifesting in missions and education is very marked. Its activity is rapidly increasing.

A Revelation if True.—

In a recent series of addresses delivered in Boston, Bishop Irving P. Johnson, of Colorado, declared that the rural communities of the country are becoming paganized to such an extent that the nation is threatened with a rural population which is unsympathetic with the ideals of American democracy. Bishop Johnson stated that juvenile irreverence exceeds juvenile delinquency today.

The declaration of the bishop is a startling one. We have always believed that the rural communities had what Christianity there was, or most of it, at best. It is a revelation if true, and it does make us pause for reflection. The country pulpits are fast coming to be occupied by incompetent men or by none at all, and it is true that country folk are drifting out of the Church. The country Church, especially in the Christian Church, presents at present a genuine problem. The country Churches refuse to combine into pastorates in many localities, and their failure to do this means ultimate death to them. Country Churches, would they join in pastorates, each sacrificing something, might command competent men to fill their pulpits. It is a problem which we, being, as we are, 90 per cent rural, need to think on seriously.

President Doumergue Speaks.—

While making an official visit to his native province in the south of France, President Doumergue took occasion to speak to his old neighbors and friends. Among other things, the French President said: "Long experience has taught me that ideas never gain ground by being either spread or defended with violence. Violence adds nothing to their virtue, when they have any, and it serves only to hide their appeal, to prevent their diffusion, and sometimes to make them highly obtainable. Ideas which have need of violence to attain diffusion and become accepted never lead to happiness, liberty or lasting peace, and they never produce a very high or a very human civilization." Appealing to them to work for peace, he continued: "We have learned through bitter experience that a fervent desire for peace is not enough to assure it. The more we are eager for it, the more must we seek to establish it solidly with sure guarantees of our own creation and through the organization of security, which the League of Nations is working with so much zeal to create."

These are wise words from the first Protestant President of Roman Catholic France. They are true, very true, of all religious controversies. The theological doctrines over which men have fought and died have been of little genuine service to mankind, and survive no longer. The solid building of calmer men endures still and serves, having always an intrinsic worth all its own. Disputation settles nothing. Action is the only criterion for judging between the true and the false. We need to live Christ, not to argue Him.

Effective Enforcement.—

In his report for his three years of service, Commissioner Haynes declares that prohibition is becoming more effective. He points out that more than 177,000 arrests have been made by the Federal authorities in the last three years; over 138,200 cases have been taken to Federal courts, and 94,300 convictions obtained. Thousands of other cases have been turned into other courts. Fines of nearly eighteen million dollars have been imposed, and $12,300,000 have been turned into the Treasury; within the three years 11,077 automobiles and 444 boats have been confiscated. About 4,000 "padlock" cases have been instituted in Federal and State courts since July, 1922, and 3,200 injunctions granted, with 2,760 of them made permanent. About 180 such cases have been instituted against breweries, 72 injunctions have been made permanent, and 29 breweries closed. The heaviest penalty reported was a fine of $21,000 and a sentence of twenty years in prison on the charge of conspiracy.

This report would indicate that Commissioner Haynes has been doing good work, but much yet remains to be done. Every Christian must unite in enforcing the prohibition law. It is the business of every man. Law enforcement was not meant for officers alone. Every citizen is the law himself, and should make the enforcing of it his business. The safety of the next generation demands it.

Cigarettes on the Increase.—

Some interesting and at the same time alarming figures concerning the unparalleled increase in the cigarette habit have been gathered from the United States Treasury and census reports. The growth is shown to be 1 per cent a month. The industry has passed the billion-dollar mark, and is well on toward the two-billion-dollar figure. In July, there were manufactured in the United States 6,583,000,000 cigarettes. At this rate, more than 77,000,000,000 cigarettes will be manufactured this year. The July output showed an increase of 750,000,000 over the output of July one year ago. In 1914, there were manufactured only 16,427,000,000 cigarettes, which shows an increase of more than 450 per cent in the past ten years. This increase in the cigarette business is somewhat offset by a decrease of 25 per cent in the cigar business in the last five years; but despite the decrease, there were 7,300,000,000 cigars manufactured last year. Two years ago, 800 cigarettes were manufactured for every adult, but last year there were 1,200 turned out for every man and woman over twenty-one.

It is difficult to know just what is causing this vast growth of the habit, but it sets a very real problem for the country. If cigarettes come under control, it will be through the medium of the school-room. We must write their injurious effects into our textbooks just as a few years ago we wrote the injurious effects of alcohol into them. Such propaganda brought about prohibition, and similar propaganda will counteract the unprecedented growth of the cigarette habit. This problem is fraught with grave danger financially, morally and religiously, and it must be reckoned with by Churches and Church people for the safety of the boys and girls who are hourly becoming cigarette addicts.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. P. Fletcher, field secretary adult division of the Department of Christian Education, gave two helpful messages at the Eastern Virginia Conference.

Mr. A. F. Chase was a pleasant visitor to the Eastern Virginia Conference. He is the circulation manager of our Church periodicals. He also had his supply of books along.

The Western North Carolina Conference showed progress, and held one of its best sessions last week at Randleman Christian Church. This Church just recently closed a successful revival.

Our Churches should be careful not to neglect the offering for Christian education. It was to have been taken November 2d, but any time this month will do. Send it to C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C.

The Sun's editor was unable to attend the Western North Carolina Conference last week on account of a slight illness. He is improving nicely and will soon be out. The brethren there certainly missed him.

Dr. W. T. Sanger addressed the meeting of the W. C. T. Unions at the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., last Wednesday evening. The attendance was good, and the speaker pleased his audience.

Our Church is entitled to thirty-six delegates to the Foreign Mission Conference, which is to assemble in Washington, D. C., January 28th to February 3d. We hope that we shall have every one of the thirty-six present.

There are few homes without a Bible, but an interest in Bible reading might be developed if you should order one of the Revised American Standard Bibles advertised in The Sun. Oxford Bibles are also advertised.

Our Colored Christian Conference has been in session at Burlington this week. They are wide awake and doing things. Early in the new year they will hold a school of religious education for pastors at Franklinton Christian College.

Rev. W. P. Fletcher, D. D., secretary of the Department of Christian Education, was a welcome visitor at the office of The Christian Sun last week. He spoke at the First Christian Church on "Graded Work in the Sunday Schools."

Dr. G. O. Lankford has been elected president of the Western N. C. Conference to succeed Rev. G. R. Underwood. Bro. Underwood has served our cause long and faithfully in Western Carolina. Dr. Lankford is a worthy successor to this fruitful old veteran.

The Federal Council of Churches is to meet in quadrennial session in Atlanta, Ga., beginning December 3d. Our Church will have its full quota of delegates in attendance. The Federal Council stands for the ideas our Church has stood for for more than a century.

Mr. J. N. Bradford is working for Men and Millions in the Valley of Virginia; Miss Gertrude Brown, in North Carolina, and Rev. W. H. Brewer begins in the next few days in Eastern Virginia. Will our pastors, captains, and people all aid these workers in every way possible? It will be appreciated.

The Eastern Virginia Conference was highly favored in having an illustrated lecture by President W. A. Harper, which gave on the screen a panoramic view of recent buildings and enterprises of the Christian Church. This is one of the most suggestive and helpful presentations of our institutions, Churches and enterprises that we have seen in many a day. Any audience looking at these pictures and hearing Dr. Harper will realize that the Christians are a busy lot and are pushing forward in their great task of helping to build up the kingdom of our Lord.

Have you paid your Men and Millions pledge? If not, why not? That is a question worthy of our consideration, at any rate. Added to our list of workers for Men and Millions is Rev. W. H. Brewer, one of our younger ministers, who was ordained at the recent session of the Georgia and Alabama Conference at Lanett, Ala. Bro. Brewer will work for the next few weeks among Churches in Eastern Virginia, and we are sure the friends there will receive him gladly and speed him along happily in his good work.

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., one of the editors of The Christian Sun, is enjoying a well-earned and much-needed vacation, with his wife, in the Bermuda Islands. The Church at Dover, of which Dr. Helfenstein is pastor, in recognition of the invaluable service rendered in the recent building program and the tireless energy and infinite labor devoted to the same, has sent Dr. Helfenstein and wife, with a purse ample to bear the expense of the trip. It was a gracious complement, as well as a generous act wisely bestowed. Dr. Helfenstein and wife have won their way into the hearts of our Dover people, and our Dover people recognize in them workers who are worthy of highest esteem and most generous consideration.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America meets in Atlanta, Ga., December 3d to 9th. Many ministers and others who read The Christian Sun, particularly here in the South, should take advantage of this wonderful opportunity to see and to hear in council what is now possibly the most portentous, able and epoch-making religious assembly that gathers anywhere in the United States. One is often reminded in a meeting of the Federal Council of a Christian Conference on a big, great, broad scale. The council's deliberations are carried on with the same Christian fellowship and the same spirit of liberality and brotherhood that obtains in our Christian Conferences and Conventions. It is a school of learning and a source of wonderful information and inspiration to all who are blessed with attending.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the great-hearted hospitality of the people of Christian Temple, Norfolk, as displayed in entertaining the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Delegates were given entertainment in the homes of members and friends at night and for breakfast; a sumptous midday dinner and an elegant supper was served at the commodious and beautifully arranged dining hall of the Church. The Church is equipped with a cuisine apartment that would do credit to any domestic science department in a college, and the dining-room furnishings are sufficient and ample. The good women of the Church did the rest. Meals were served warm and promptly as if in a home, and the fellowship was delightful. It is certainly a joy and a real asset to any Conference to be so bountifully and conveniently entertained.

Rev. S. A. Howell, D. D., as president of the Afro-Christian Convention, has recently organized a Christian Church, with sixty charter members, in Jersey City, N. J. Dr. Howell writes that there is a bright prospect also for a substantial Christian Church in New York City in the near future. The Convention of which Dr. Howell is president received a whole Conference in New Jersey and Delaware some time ago. We now have something like a dozen or more Christian Conferences composed of the negro membership of the Christian Church in North Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, Maryland, and New Jersey. President Henderson, of Franklinton Church, visited the editor of The Sun recently and gave a fine account of the very rapid growth of the Christian Church in the bounds of the Afro-Christian Convention. He has raised in cash for Franklinton College $2,200 within the last few weeks to apply on the splendid new dormitory going up at Franklinton. Dr. Howell and President Henderson are able leaders, who seem to be doing great and effectual work.

The Mission Board, to whom the Convention entrusted the matter, is doing the best it can now to let each individual who subscribed to Men and Millions know just what amount has been paid, what amount is now due, and how very needful it is for each one to pay something or all on his or her pledge. Within the next sixty days we want all subscribers to this very important and needy fund to know exactly what their pledges are and be given an opportunity of making some payment thereon. Some cannot pay now possibly, but they can at least advise as to when they can make some payment. We are in the fifth year of the movement, and it is felt that all have a right to know just what they pledged and what they are yet due. Every enterprise of the Christian Church shares in this fund, and certainly no worthier movement was ever carried on amongst us. When one pays to Men and Millions, one simply pays to the cause that the Christian Church champions and carries on in the world. Many are paying promptly and faithfully—some through trial and sacrifice. Let's all do our duty, and the kingdom of God, as represenetd by the Christian Church, will receive all the benefits.

BURLINGTON.

Yesterday marked the first Sunday in the new Church year, as the Church year for this congregation runs from November 1st to November 1st, and the day was one of great interest and inspiration. Large congregations were present for all services, this being especially true of the morning Church service when the audience overflowed the main auditorium into the Sunday School assembly-room. At this service the pastor and Miss Moffitt, director of religious education, brought special messages to the children of the congregation.

It being the first Sunday of the month, Orphanage day was observed in the Sunday School as is the custom with this school, and the monthly offering amounted to about $85.00.

Following the morning service, a short congregational meeting was held for the purpose of hearing the annual report of the Church to Conference which meets this week at Randleman. This report showed progress in all departments of the work. During the year the Church has made a substantial increase in membership, said to be the largest increase in any one year of the Church's history. Raised by the Sunday School during the year $2,600 by the Woman's Missionary Society more than $1,000, by the Young People's Missionary Society a little more than $200, and by the Church in all its departments, in round numbers $12,000.

In entering upon the work of the new Church year, a spirit of co-operation and good will is in evidence. A forward-looking program is being put on and fine results are expected in the coming weeks and months.—Burlington News.

DANVILLE.

One of the largest congregations since the last revival service was present on Sunday evening at Third Avenue Christian Church, Danville, Va., to hear the pastor's (Rev. P. T. Klapp) farewell sermon. There were many present to show their love and respect for one who had been among us for a long time. He has many friends, and they were indeed loath to part with him. It was a sad but sweet service. His farewell sermon was accepted by many and deep regrets. The people of the Church honor him.

Bro. Klapp was a pastor sent by God. His messages were biblical and spiritual. He is familiar with the English Bible and sticks to its plain teaching. The philosophies and cults of modern scholarship gives him no concern, and does not shake his simple faith in the Word of God.

He seeks out the spiritual meaning of Scripture and tests it in his own life. He has a passion for souls, and won many to Christ while pastor at Danville. His sermons were personal. He preached the whole gospel truth while serving here. In the strong sermons he touched not only the congregation, but the community in which he served.

Bro. Klapp's tender sympathy, his close touch with human feelings made him a power in the pulpit and in the home. Many of the deacons, lay members, and members of other denominations verbally expressed their thanks and appreciation to him for his faithful and untiring service he had rendered to them during his pastorate at Danville. He was a useful and beloved pastor.

Bro. Klapp is no more with us at this place, but his work, his influence will live and be felt in extending the kingdom of God. His labors will continue to be felt and live on and on to the end of time. Blessed be his memory!

May God bless and protect our former pastor wherever he goes, as he has been a blessing to us. MISS FRANCES WILLIAMS.

VANCE COUNTY NEWS.

The people around Epsom, N. C., are waking up to the need for conscientious and systematic Christian work. The Ham-Ramsey revival recently came to our town. This was indeed a great inspiration to every one that attended. One of Mr. Ham's great themes was "How to Discern a Christian." He said you did not have to ask or be told, as a true Christian was always known; that the moment we ever thought ourselves better than another, we sealed ourself against God's using us in any way. But humble yourselves before the Lord and He will lift you up. We got busy to examine ourselves and see where we stood. The way is so straight and clean we fear there are but few traveling therein. I want to say, in passing, that any place is blessed that has the Ham-Ramsey party to visit it.

After the revival in Henderson there was the greatest number to unite with the different Churches that we ever knew of before. Best of all, after Mr. Ham is gone his work goes on through the Federation of Christian Workers, composed of men and women that are willing to go out and do their best for Jesus Christ. A number of these loyal men came out from Henderson and helped us organize a federation at Epsom. In this work we hope to be more united as Christians, as we have one meeting with the Baptist and one in our own Church. As a community we want to lay aside all creeds and doctrines, and work together for God's glory. We went out on our first trip Sunday P. M., October 26th, to visit an old lady unable to attend services. We went to carry her a bit of cheer and joy, but we received the blessing. Soon after we arrived in her home, where she lives alone, we knew that we had gone to a place where Jesus stays. In our weak way we rendered a prayer and testimony service that most took part in.

This dear old lady's testimony of God's love and protection, her great faith in Jesus Christ, was a deep inspiration to each of us. While she is not very active, she believes that Jesus is always near, a present help in time of need.

I praise the Lord that He gave me this privilege of going to see this sainted woman and being so greatly benefited by her wonderful testimony. We all left expressing a desire to obtain such faith that will make us ready and willing for Jesus to come.

On our return home we stopped in for another short service with an invalid man. This was appreciated by them in the home and enjoyed by all of us. A few trips like these mentioned will certainly make us stronger in the faith. May God bless these dear people. We ask the prayers of every reader, that God may fit us for service and use us in some way to help win the world for Christ.

For 4,000 years God required a blood sacrifice, then Jesus made the great and last sacrifice by giving His blood, that we might be saved. If we are saved, we are saved for service. Paul says, "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." This shows us that God wants our best in service to Him. May we all awake to our Christian duty and be up and doing while we have time and opportunity. There is a great work that the Churches cannot reach. If we will fully consecrate ourselves in service for Jesus and let our light so shine before them, they seeing our good works will be constrained to glorify our father in heaven. Pray to that end.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

Henderson, N. C.

GOOD FORTUNE OF A MINISTER'S BOY.

We are all well aware now that no boy can have a better training for distinction than to grow up in a minister's home. As Bishop Hughes, of the Methodist Church, lately pointed out:

"There have been three preachers' boys in the White House. Nine of the signers of the Declaration of Independence were sons of ministers. Five Supreme Court judges and many Governors, in addition to a great list of lesser political officials, were products of manses. The Democratic party never elected a Presidential candidate who was not the son of a minister. The Wright brothers, pioneers of aviation, were manse products, and the first transatlantic flight was made by the son of a preacher. The inventor of the telegraph, Samuel Morse, was a pastor's son. So it goes."

The boy born in a minister's home a generation ago was about one thousand times as likely as the farmer's son to reach sufficient distinction to be listed in "Who's Who."—Christian Work.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

IS THIS GROWTH?

If the following fact indicates growth, one would like to know in which direction the growth is! It is an observed fact that at our annual Conference the apportionment committee every year brings in a report which reads about as follows: "Your apportionment committee begs leave to report that it recommends the same apportionment in all the Churches as last year. The Church at Israel's Knob feels that its apportionment is a few dollars too high, and we recommend that the apportionment for this Church be made a few dollars less than last year. Respectfully submitted."

In hearing such a report, one wonders if the committee is of opinion that there is no increase of wealth among the membership of the Church for the year, or no increase in membership of the Church. Of course, if the committee, by its report, indicates that there is to be a decrease in the wealth of the membership, and also in the numbers of members in the Churches of the Conference, the committee is highly justified and does not cast any reflection. However, if there is a prospect or a promise of an outlook for an increase of wealth without any increase or income for Church purposes, then wealth is increasing more rapidly than the resources to the Church. One wonders, after all, if the liberality of our day in needs of benevolence and the Church is increasing as rapidly as wealth is! In proportion to wealth and members, is the Church giving more to benevolences and to the kingdom today than it was ten years ago, or fifteen or twenty?

Unless there is a more rapid increase of gifts to benevolences than there is in increase of wealth or increase of expenditures for other consumptive purposes, then our liberality is not growing, but is being dwarfted in comparison. At any rate, the average report of the apportionment committee is exceedingly interesting, and makes one who is disposed to think on these things wonder, and wonder, and wonder.

WHY SO FEW CONVERSIONS?

The above heading is the caption to an article appearing in Christian Work, one of the organs of the Presbyterian Church, a few weeks ago. No comment is needed, so we reproduce it as it was written for the benefit of our readers:

The report of the statistician at the meeting of the Presbyterian General Council at Atlantic City two weeks ago has caused no little thought and anxiety among Presbyterians, and, for that matter, among other Christians. For, although other denominations do not report a lesser number going to Church this year than last, yet none of them are proud of their showing. The immediate effect of this report was to make everybody ask: Why? Here is one of the great, powerful communions, more prosperous and better managed this year than ever, the missionary spirit at its full, and yet there are fewer accessions to the Church than in previous years. There must be a reason or reasons.

Of course, the fundamentalists had the reason at once. They, with one accord, said it was due to heresy in the Church, and due to the controversy of the past year. They intimated that modernist preaching has no evangelical flavor. It has no gripping, convincing or convicting gospel. We cannot expect conversions where it is preached. Furthermore, these heretical preachers distract the mind of the Church from its main business of winning souls. Some of our fundamentalist friends seem almost glad that there have been fewer accessions, so they might have this opportunity gleefully to say: I told you so.

Well, it is all nonsense. It has had nothing to do with it one way or another, and the facts are all against the theory. The falling off is just as pronounced in conservative centers as in liberal. In Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, where much of the preaching is still in the language of John Calvin, the falling off is just as pronounced as in New York, where Coffin, Fosdick and Merrill are preaching the gospel in the language this generation understands. Moderator Mendenhall called attention to this fact in an interview in the New York Times of September 26th, saying that New York had made even a better showing than the rest of the country. (Dr. Fosdick's Church has made one of the best showings of all, one hundred and forty-six members having been added during the last Church year.) Furthermore, outside of a few large centers, the people have not even heard whether there was a modernist or fundamentalist controversy on. We who live in large cities and read the big dailies, and especially we who read the religious papers, think all the world is as excited as we are. As a matter of fact, the average parish Church goes serenely on its way and does not know whether Dr. Fosdick is a modernist or a premillennialist, and cares less. Most of the people do not even know what the words mean. They have a vague suspicion that a modernist is a man who wants to supplant the Bible by Darwin's "Origin of Species" (which they have learned from Mr. Bryan's Chautauqua lectures), and that the fundamentalists stand for "the old-time religion." When the silly debates between Drs. Straton and Potter were on over evolution, the virgin birth, inspiration and other subjects, while the New York papers were printing them in full, in a certain big section of the United States where we were touring, there was not even a mention of them in the papers. Herein the editors showed their good sense perhaps, for greater twaddle on both sides was never uttered in public. No, the explanation is not here. Outside the columns of the Presbyterian, everybody is quite sane and calm and not unduly disturbed over modernism. In the average parish, it is never mentioned except when the minister mystifies his congregation by calling some one they never heard of names.

The reason is far deeper and far more serious, and it goes back to both people and preacher, although we believe the remedy lies in the preacher's hands. One reason why there is a falling off in accessions is directly traceable to the homes. On Sundays, between April and December, all over the United States, families that used to go to Church or at least to send their children to Sunday School, now go off for the day in the automobile. The average country road is now impassable on Sundays. This all leads to a decline of interest in the Church on the winter Sundays when the family is at home. The steps follow logically, all ending in a lack of interest in religion and a devotion to sports, which is the religion of large groups of the American people.

A second reason is the growing feeling on the part of many respectable people that the Church, and even religion, does not matter. We heard it all expressed the other day: "I have a pretty home, a car, a good income, all the books I want, good schools for my children, the theaters, and the movies—everything going as smoothly as a marriage bell—what need have I of the Church or religion?" This is becoming a very common attitude in every town. Every preacher who reads these words knows how many families feel this way and are simply indifferent to the Church. "It is all right for those who want it, but I'm simply not interested in it." Of course, we Protestant clergy are largely to blame for this thing, with all our talk about the Church being a human institution, an association on a par with the Masons, the Odd Fellows and the Elks, a thing to be chosen or left, instead of being Christ's representative in the world, speaking with His authority in spiritual things. However this may be, here is the condition and it must be faced.

The real reason, however, is due to the loss of the passion for souls on the part of the clergy, and the criminal carelessness with which they are letting the children pass out of their hands, or perhaps putting it the other way about, the criminal neglect to hold every child in the parish for Jesus Christ and His Church. There are three prime functions of the minister—one, conducting public worship, including preaching; two, pastoral work; three, the winning of souls for Jesus Christ and building up His Church. The average parish minister in the Presbyterian communion, as in the others, is very faithful to the first function. He is diligent in his study and puts considerable work upon his sermons. We think the preaching should be more of the instructive and expository type, but still it is fairly good and is not neglected. The second function —that of the pastoral care of the community— is not neglected, but is not done with quite the general enthusiasm devoted to preaching. It is when we come to the third function of the minister that we find the greatest carelessness and neglect of duty, and yet we are not sure, but it must receive chief emphasis soon if the Church is to persist. We refer to the building up of the Church of Jesus Christ. Some may prefer the words, "winning souls for Jesus Christ," but it is the same thing. There is not, never has been, and never will be, any vital Christian life outside the Church. Bishop Gore is perfectly right in his contention in his last book, that Christianity and the Church are practically identical things. Yet, in parish after parish, the minister is making no devoted, enthusiastic, continuous effort to win every soul in his parish for Christ.

Here is the reason for the falling off in accessions, all over the world, and it is in correcting this that the remedy lies.

Not in the remedy Dr. Weber proposes—"a denomination-wide, evangelistic movement which will give the Presbyterian Church a leading part in the work of the kingdom of God in the country." Evangelistic movements are praiseworthy things in some instances, although we more and more doubt the benefit from them as generally conducted. All Wales was stirred by Evan Roberts, but it was only the other day that some one in England was doubting whether any permanent good resulted. Whether good results or not, all the revivals or carefully planned evangelistic campaigns the Church might conduct will not touch the hem of this problem. It is not a case of evangelism. The Church is not built up in this way. Some souls are saved by them; but the Church is not steadily and permanently benefited by such methods. The Church is built up by the steady, faithful, conscientious work of the local pastor, especially by his training the children for the Church and leading them into it. The sooner we recognize this and turn our whole emphasis there, the sooner the great accessions to the Church will come.

We have a suggestion to make. If the pastors will act upon it, it will mean the biggest accession to the Church in 1925 that it has known for years. It is this: let every pastor resolve that during the months preceding Easter, not one boy or girl who has reached the age of fourteen shall, in his Sunday School, escape joining the Church of Christ. This means that between now and Easter the pastor will take all the boys and girls of this age into his charge, instructing them every week, nurturing them in faith, becoming their loving friend and counselor. It will mean that he will hold them all, or nearly all for Christ. If he is brave enough to go further and begin this fall to talk personally to every man and woman in his parish who is not a member of his Church, he will be surprised at the number of those who will respond and, pondering deeply over his words, give themselves to Christ.

Here is the cure, brethren, and the only cure!

THE MASHER ASSUMES THE OFFENSIVE.

A recent issue of the Durham Herald complained bitterly of the incursions of mashers, whose increasing boldness is a severe trial and annoyance to girls and women of that city. The youths and older men whose ideas of a good time prompt them to offer insulting attentions to women, hang about drug stores, promenade the busy streets and otherwise place themselves in strategic positions where they can insinuate improper advances. The victims are rendered helpless through pride because, by appealing for assistance to decent men or carrying complaints to the police, they would be subjected to publicity that is galling to the instincts of a woman. The best women are able to do under the circumstances is to ignore attentions and get out of the sight of the masher as soon as possible.

The more depraved the masher is, the more accomplished is he in annoyance, it would seem. Many of the men given to this reprehensible practice use cars. Driving up to the curb, a victim is selected. A simple repulse is not sufficient to drive off the offender. He follows and persists. What a miserable experience it is for a girl or woman!

It is a terrible commentary on human nature that women cannot go shopping or pass along the streets in security. Durham is not the only city that suffers from the same trouble. In fact, there is no city or town in the country without its quota of worthless youths and men whose chief business in life is running women down with evil intentions. This is a situation demanding a remedy. Of course, there is no way of swabbing the filth from diseased minds, nor is it possible to stop the business of mashing in its entirety. But some means must be found of knocking the popularity out of it through drastic punishment.

With women of culture and natural refinement, the experience of running afoul of a masher is merely a matter of disgust. The result is negative from the offender's viewpoint. All he can do in the circumstances is to vent his disappointment in a parting word of indecency. The intelligent woman of good instincts, whether she be in the wealthy or threadbare class, is immune to any appeal of the kind under consideration.

But there is imminent danger for girls with the maturity of womanhood and the immaturity of childhood. Pretty faces and feeble minds are not rare things. Scoundrels of mashers prey with enthusiastic regularity on this class. Many of the child-women fall into the trap without the least appreciation of the moral element. In due course of time, many of them come into notoriety and revilement. Virtuous folk turn from them with disgust—"vile little wretches" they are called. All the wrath of society is turned loose on them when, in large measure, many of them are victims of circumstances due to weak mentalities for which they are not responsible.

This class particularly should be kept guarded from the wiles of the masher. A little girl walking down the street is accosted politely perhaps by a rather good-looking fellow. She is invited to take a spin. To her, at that time, the circumstance is merely an innocent little lark. In her mind there is neither suspicion of evil nor any predilection thereto. However, the fly is no match for the wily spider. In this way, a multitude of innocents are devoured. It is a shameful situation. Society is much to blame, for society, in its virtuous indignation, excuses itself and nurtures virtuous sentiments through despising and ostracising the victims, when it should be busying itself with measures of prevention.

The masher is one of the big problems of morality. Society is too indifferent or timid in the premises. It is easier to exercise punitive disgust after something has happened than it is to throw around women safeguards against its happening. Also it is too embarrassing to have to do with rounders of strong social standing often found in the masher class. Scions of prominent families are sometimes as guilty of lounge-lizardism as the natural scum. These gilded youths get by easily. The girl gets the sum total of blame. And so the game goes on.

Preaching morality, writing about it in the papers, inveighing against it by resolution or by the grapevine line of gossip offer weak resistance against the army of mashers. They are merely amused. Slush talk about morality will have to be substituted by some sort of real action against actual offenders.

Every woman, from the humblest to the highest lady of the land, should be given ample protection against insult. Mashing should be made a major crime. It is humiliating to women of the strongest character and standing, and highly menacing to countless thousands with weak mental endowments and poor advantages in life. Here is where real work needs to be done.—Orphans' Friend.

THE DRAWING POWER OF CHRIST.

Jesus said: "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." But they did not understand that it was the cross which was to lift Him up; neither did they understand that the Lamb of God must be slain, His blood poured out to redeem sinful men. He tried to tell them, but somehow they could not grasp it.

Jesus had told them before: "When ye have lifted up the Son of Man, then shall ye know that I am He"; and again: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have eternal life." It was the cross, the shed blood of the crucified Christ which opened the way for all kinds of men to come. It is the only way. But of late years, the cross and the blood of the Lamb of God are left out, largely. Other ways and means are being substituted. There is no other way, for it is only by the blood of Christ that we are cleansed from all sin.

Oh! for greater lifting power; for the drawing power of Christ is just as great as it ever was. His drawing power is not lessened, but men's lifting power is weakened by mixing in too much of the world. Too much of the work is done to be seen of men. Oh! that each one of us might realize that Jesus is the one to be seen, and that the lifter must stand behind the cross. Oh! that we might be given power to lift Him above anything, everything in the world. Lift Him up so high the world no longer attracts. Lift Him up so high the drawing power is irresistable. May we not forget that only those who have measured their length upon the cross have power to lift Him up. Self must first be crucified.

When we have experienced His drawing power to such an extent that we are ready to "bid farewell to the ways of the world, to walk in them never more," let us remember His keeping power is just as great as His drawing power. Those who are drawn away from the world by the uplifted Christ, although they are in the world, they are not of the world. He keeps so securely that none are able to pluck them out of His hand. Blessed Lord, may each one of us know the peace and joy of those who have the witness that they are being safely kept in the hollow of Thy all-powerful hand.

Mt. Vernon, Ohio. MINNIE LOHR.

FIELD NOTES.

We have just closed a fine revival and successful meeting at New Center Christian Church. It began the fourth Sunday and closed on the first Sunday night. Rev. J. C. Edwards did the preaching, and his sermons were thrilling and laden with power. There were a great number converted, while ten lined up with the Church and more will join. The Church has taken on new life. There is a fine spirit in the Church. A holy atmosphere pervaded the neighborhood. We are having a fine prayer meeting and Christian Endeavor meeting every Sunday night.

Last evening we held our last quarterly meeting for this year. There was a fine spirit in the meeting. Everybody enjoyed it. The Church is planning to do some work on the Church in the near future. The pastor and family will move their membership shortly from Park's X Roads to New Center, as it is nearer for them.

May the Lord bless and build up the Church in the most holy faith.

We also had a fine meeting at Needham's Grove, netting ten conversions and nine additions to the Church.

Brown's Chapel meeting closed with good success. We are looking forward to brighter days. Pray for us that God may use us for His kingdom. We are planning for a greater work the coming year. May God use us in a larger way than ever before. W. J. EDWARDS.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Church membership is a great privilege and a life obligation. Citizenship in a good country is a great privilege and a life obligation. The same is true of membership in a good family. So many good things come to men without their choice, and without their consent, that indifference creeps into personal relations to institutions, even when they are chosen, as in the case of Church membership. Indifference is the bane of human society, and is equally fatal in the Church. The light vote in the recent election shows a state of civic indifference that could not be overcome by a widespread campaign to get out the Christian vote. There has been a new disease in recent time called "sleepy disease." Some have died of it. There is no pain, and, therefore, no active suffering. There must be such a spiritual condition in the Church: a state of spiritual sluggishness, of spiritual inactivity that makes the individual useless; and yet it does not destroy membership. A member of a family does not lose membership in the family because of the "sleepy disease," or any other disease. A citizen does not lose his citizenship because of indifference or helplessness. In fact, if such a member of the family or citizen becomes a charge on the home or the State, it does not forfeit the place of child or citizen.

What to do with Church members who do not attend Sunday School, Church services, business meetings; who do not make any contribution to current expenses or benevolences; who seem to be indifferent to all Church claims and obligations—is one of the questions that confronts all local Churches.

There are about three reasons that are used to reduce Church rolls—non-payment of dues, absent from the locality, and Conference per capita apportionments. None of these justify expulsion or dropping of names. None of these forfeit membership in a Church, and all Churches have all three of these classes. Of course, inability excuses members from attendance and payment of dues. To those whose location, health, and financial condition make attendance and contributions possible, no excuse is valid; but such neglect does not justify removal of names from the Church register. Membership in a Church is permanent, unless some overt sin automatically forfeits membership. Negative qualities are not sufficient reasons to remove names from the list of membership. The prodigal son was a member of the family while in a far country spending his substance in riotous living as surely as when he was at home doing his part as a son, for the father said upon his return: "This my son was dead, and is alive again." When I was a boy, and one of the cows did not come up, I was sent to look after the absent one and bring her in; and when brought in, she gave milk for the family. Many Church members do not come up; but they might if one went out to hunt for them. Sheep need hunting up as well as cows; and Church members are represented as sheep. I get from out-of-city members as much as $100 every Easter for benevolences. This year I received for benevolences from non-resident members $123. A letter and an object will bring help. Now, as to resident members who do not pay, it is doubtful whether a Church has the moral right to drop the names to reduce per capita assessments by the Conference. Such members are a charge on the Church as worthless members of a family are a charge on the faithful members of the family. Dropping the name is, to say the least, a doubtful proposition. If God were to drop from the Lamb's Book of Life all the unfaithful and indifferent, it might leave us outside.

Church membership should be kept intact, and the Church should pay for the indifferent or hunt them up and induce them to do their part. The Churches should report their full membership and then undertake the Christian task of restoring such as neglect attendance and financial support. Here is a field for prayer, thought, and personal work.

W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

Recently we studied that matchless parable, the prodigal son. I have long sympathized with the bright young fellow in the parable, and I think Jesus did too. Evidently he and his older brother did not get along well together. His father evidently loved the younger son, but was engrossed in his business cares and neglected his son.

Prodigal boys are not born. They are made. They grow up step by step. The father goes his way and the boy goes his, the distance ever increasing between them. The prodigal of the parable had a desire for travel. There is no harm in this. He wasted his substance with harlots in riotous living. Perhaps he would have done this even if he had been instructed as to the secret of life and in the sanctity of its use. But how do we know?

When he went broke, he got a job. He was no deadbeat. And when a famine arose, he decided to return to his father's house and try for a job there, duly confessing his sins. Such a boy deserves forgiveness and another chance. His father forgave him and received him back to sonship. How could he do otherwise?

Many a father packs his interests in his business or his profession and journeys into a far country of stocks and bonds, and clubs and golfing, oblivious of his family and particularly of his son. And one day he wakes up to find himself poverty-stricken and in dire need of love and sympathy. He thereupon resolves to return to his son, but finds it is too late—too late! The boy's love for him is gone and cannot be won back.

"Father and Son Week," november 9th to 16th, gives a splendid opportunity to emphasize the ideal as well as the practical relationships that should characterize fathers and sons in their lives and actions. Father should be more than a dad; he should be a chum for his lad.

HOW GOD PREPARED THE WORLD FOR PAUL.

God prepared for Paul even as He did for His Son Jesus Christ. In His wise economy, much of the preparation for Christ was also Pauline. For our theme, however, the following are twelve of the ways in which God prepared the world for Paul:

In the first half of the fourth century B. C., Alexander conquered the world and gave it the most nearly perfect Greek language. For more than three centuries this language of literature, philosophy, and culture compassed the then known world until when Paul came he could be understood by speaking the Greek language wherever he went. A great deal of modern missionary energy is used up in language study. This burden God had already overcome in Paul's world.

Rome, in the second place, had wrested from the Greeks the political power of which they were at one time proud possessors and had formed the most nearly perfect political machine in the history of nations. Theirs was a strong, stable, unified government—the very epitome of law and order.

This condition in Rome brought about the Pax Romana. For the first time in more than three centuries there was world peace. This brought trade, prosperity and travel to high tide in the affairs of men.

Out of this situation grew a cosmopolitan condition in the cities of Paul's world, or the world of Paul's day, so that, for instance, Paul could preach from a street in Ephesus and be heard by representatives from all peoples. This was of great advantage to the Jesus movement.

Fifthly, Paul found it easy to sail the seas, and his hearers found it easy because Rome had driven the pirates from the otherwise peaceful waters; and sixthly, Rome had built her roads over all her dominion, so that Paul found land travel as expeditiously done as was travel by sea.

God had prepared the Palestinian Jew for Paul's day by not allowing him to fulfill his dreams in establishing a Jewish material kingdom. Their hopes had been in vain, and now Palestine was turning its mind toward a spiritual kingdom.

Eighthly, Jews had been dispersed into the uttermost parts of that world. In Egypt alone, in Paul's day, there were one million Jews. These Jews found the formalism of the fathers burdensome. They were letting much of it lag. Sacrifices were more infrequent; food laws were being forgotten, and circumcision was being neglected. This followed the field for Paul's message.

In the ninth place, the world had become philosophy-wise; yea, even philosophically fadish. Every city had its solvers of the riddle of life preaching in their streets, but they had done little more than to create a soul-thirst, a heart-hunger, and caused a more or less general acceptance of monotheism. They knew, but had no power to do. Philosophy of the worldly wise types had failed.

Mystery religions had found a place in this heart-hunger. Cybele and Mithras had become popular. Cybele, a female goddess of Persia, was worshiped as mother of all. This was preparation for Paul's God. And Mithros was a god of love, virtue and truth; to know him you must become initiated, but even after all the longing for the attributes he represented was only created with no power to do or become. They were prepared for the doctrines of Paul.

In the eleventh place, Rome required emperor worship of all her subjects save Jews, and after the worship of the emperor they guaranteed religious tolerance. In the early days of the Jesus movement it was not distinguished by Rome from Judaism and was thus greatly protected.

And, finally, the world was geographically centralized about the Mediterranean Sea, as the name itself implies. It was of easy access.

NOTICE.

All persons expecting to attend the Eastern North Carolina Conference, which meets at Pleasant Union (Harnett), November 18, 19, 20, 1924, will please notify Mr. A. M. Long, Lillington, N. C., as to how they expect to come. Those who come by rail will be met at Lillington. The Church is just a little off Highway No. 21, with good road up to Church.

PLEASANT HILL CHURCH.

As pastor of Pleasant Hill Church, Alamance, I closed my services on the first Sunday in November, 1924, after five years of delightful fellowship. A unanimous call was extended to serve for another year, but on account of very heavy work and lack of time, I did not see the way to accept. I bespeak for the incoming pastor and the Church a successful year.

The Conference year closed with all obligations met and a forward-looking view for the new year. Improvements have been made on the Church building during the year and plans are made for the erection of two additional Sunday School rooms.

We had delightful services on Sunday. There were one hundred and thirty-six in Sunday School and a large congregation at the 11 o'clock preaching service. Two members were received into Church fellowship, and the Lord's Supper was administered after preaching. The Church has a ladies missionary society, and the Sunday School takes a monthly offering for the Christian Orphanage.

When I went out to my Ford at the close of the services I found it loaded with valuable things for the pantry. It has been a pleasure to serve as pastor the Pleasant Hill Church, and I wish for the Church much success.

AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLES.

Authorized and Edited by American Revision Committee, and Published by Thomas Nelson & Sons.

These Bibles contain the Concise Bible Dictionary which forms the helps to these Teachers' Bibles. It supplies, in the most condensed and convenient form, all the latest information about the Bible, its writers, its language, the various versions, complete chronology, life of Christ, with harmony of the Gospels, life and travels of St. Paul, etc. The Illustrations are reproduced from recent photographs, and truly illustrate the articles. The Combined Concordance is entirely new, and has been made expressly for the American Standard Version. It combines with the Concordance, Subject-Index, Scripture Proper Names, etc. The 12 Maps have been carefully revised and are beautifully colored. In making orders, give the Number and prices.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FIRST FINANCIAL GOAL OF MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

There were five goals in the financial side of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The first goal was to collect $125,000 under the special mission fund, to which was subscribed $128,000. There has never been found a preacher or layman who opposed this special campaign. Members were not asked for less than $50.00 for five years. Deacon J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, challenged the Southern Christian Convention to raise $100,000. We accepted the challenge, and took subscriptions for $128,000. Mr. Darden paid his $5,000 in cash. He expected us to pay our subscriptions. The records show collections as follows:

J. M. Darden	$ 5,000.00
24,587 members	79,523.42
Total	$84,523.42

I appeal to those individuals who have not paid pledges aggregating $43,476.58 to pay the same at once and help meet the deficit of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention and the Mission Board at Dayton, Ohio. We made certain appropriations and obligations with the utmost confidence in you. We had faith in you. Will you disappoint us? Will you reduce the missionary work of the Church? If you cannot pay your pledges, will you give us a note, with 6 per cent interest, and curtail same as you can?

If you have lost your property, or have become sick or incapacitated for earning a living, write Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., and tell the circumstances, so that we will know what to count on. Obligations to God and His Church are more sacred than those to men. If you cannot pay all your obligations to the five financial goals, pay first those to the special mission fund. This obligation was the first made. Only 66 per cent has been collected, when we expected at least 90 per cent to be collected. Will you make a sacrifice to pay your subscription? The five years has been up for several months, but that does not cancel your obligation.

J. E. WEST,
Chairman of Mission Board.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina Woman's Christian Missionary Conference met in annual session at Reidsville, October 31st, at 10 A. M., and was presided over very graciously and efficiently by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, president, Raleigh, N. C. The officers of this Conference, besides the President, are: Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Graham, N. C., secretary, who is not only interested in recording the proceedings, but in all the work of the Conference; Mrs. W. R. Sellers, Burlington, N. C., treasurer, who, besides keeping accurate account of all funds sent in, is interested throughout the year in endeavoring to get the societies to function and trying to raise as large an amount as possible for the causes the Conference promotes; Miss Mary D. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., superintendent of young people's work, who, besides making a report of the individual societies of the young people, presented a chart showing at a glance the societies that have properly functioned the past year and those who had not; Miss Pattie Coghill, now of Boston, Mass., is superintendent of literature and mite-boxes, and sent in a written report of her work.

The morning session, for the most part, was consumed with the address of the president, which was exceedingly timely; the reports of other officers, the roll called and enrollment of delegates from all the societies present. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C., gave a very illuminating review of the study books to be used in the woman's conferences, home and foreign, and impressed upon the delegates present the actual necessity of each society having a study class and studying the book designated.

In the absence of Miss Margaret H. Morey, who wired her regrets at not being present, the mission secretary gave a brief account of the status of our work at Fancy Gap, Va., and the needs and prospects for the coming year. The treasurer's report showed an increased offering the past year over that of the year before, and the reports from the various societies are exceedingly encouraging and inspiring. Many of the societies of this Conference are certainly making great progress in the work of developing the missionary spirit and creating in their Churches and communities the missionary atmosphere.

At the noon hour the good women of our Reidsville society and Church served a bountiful luncheon in the basement of the Church, which was very greatly enjoyed by delegates and visitors present. Hospitality abounded, and an hour was spent in most happy and delightful fellowship.

At the opening of the afternoon session, Bro. J. A. Ledbetter, pastor of the Church, led the devotional services. Following these services a representative from the various societies gave reports of the best things and most suggestive that their societies had done the past year. The object of this was that each society might get something from what the other society had done by way of suggestions and helps for the coming year. One society reported that the most helpful thing it had found was the division into groups or circles. Another suggestion was brought out that it would help a strong society and an active one to take under its wings for protection and rearing some society not strong, or to start a society at a definite place and carry it on until it was strong. Many other valuable suggestions were made.

The mission secretary was permitted to call attention and emphasize the objectives and plans for the coming year and to present the very great needs of our missionary work at present. It is believed that, the coming year, our woman's societies will even accomplish greater things than was accomplished the past year, because of the seemingly greater need. As the work grows, the needs seem to multiply.

The same officers were elected the coming year, except that Miss Gertrude Brown, Elon College, N. C., was made superintendent of literature and mite-boxes, in place of Miss Pattie Coghill, who is away; and Mrs. C. H. Rowland was made superintendent of cradle roll department in place of Mrs. N. G. Newman, who has moved out of Conference.

Greensboro First Church was chosen as the place for next meeting, the Conference to convene next year, as this, on Friday before the first Sunday in November.

Altogether, it was a great and happy day, not only for the noble women who were present to show their interest in missionary work and to get inspiration for the coming year, but also for the several pastors present—Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, N. C.; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. W. S. Alexander, Elon College, N. C., and Rev. J. A. Ledbetter, Reidsville, N. C.

WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE.

This Conference met with the Church at Randleman, N. C., of which Rev. Jno. M. Allred is pastor. Rev. G. R. Underwood, president of last session, called the Conference to order. Devotional services being conducted by Rev. T. J. Green; organization was effected by electing Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., president; Rev. T. E. White, vice-president; O. D. Lawrence, treasurer; Rev. W. C. Martin, secretary, and W. R. Rightsell, assistant.

The Conference was welcomed by the pastor, Rev. Jno. M. Allred, and the response was given by Rev. W. J. Edwards. Vacancies on committees were filled and special committees appointed. Then followed the annual address delivered by Rev. G. R. Underwood, who took for his subject, "Growth." He stated many interesting facts about the Western Conference and its territory. Among those invited to seats as deliberative members were C. D. Johnston, P. J. Kernodle, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, F. M. Wright, Miss Madge Moffitt, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. W. S. Alexander.

The entertainment committee next claimed the floor, and delegates and visitors were amply provided for. At the afternoon session, ministerial and Church reports were read. While this was routine, yet marked progress was indicated. Some changes were made in the program, and the report of the committee on Christian Endeavor was heard. At the evening session, Rev. G. R. Underwood spoke, and a model Christian Endeavor Junior Society was conducted by Miss Madge Moffitt, of the Burlington Church. The Church was well filled, and all became children for the evening.

Thursday morning devotional services were conducted by Rev. W. J. Edwards. The minutes of the preceding day were read, and new delegates were seated. Rev. T. E. White represented the chairman of religious education, and spoke of the Chautauqua and School of Methods held at Elon College.

The report on education recommended the ordination of Rev. W. C. Martin. It stated that several young men would receive license to preach. The report was discussed, and an interesting address was made by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. The adoption of this report was followed by a sermon by Dr. W. S. Alexander, pastor of the college Church at Elon College, N. C.

In the afternoon, the Christian Orphanage was represented by Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, who reported 109 children being cared for. He emphasized the necessity of a liberal Thanksgiving offering.

The unique report of Dr. E. L. Moffitt, chairman of the committee on religious literature, was presented. After discussion, it was adopted. Dr. Harper was made literature auctioneer, and he rounded up a fine list of subscrobers for the Journal of Christian Education and for THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Dr. Harper, representing the president of the Southern Christian Convention, presented the recommendations of the Convention in regard to apportionments.

At the evening session, the sermon was preached by Rev. T. E. White, and the ordination of Rev. W. C. Martin by the presbytery, and licenture granted to new candidates for the ministry.

WOMAN'S BOARD MEETING.

The midyear session of the Woman's Mission Board of the Valley of Virginia Central Conference was held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va., on Saturday, November 1, 1924, and was attended by nearly all the members of the board.

The meeting was interesting from start to finish. The new president, Miss Verdie Showalter, presided over the meeting in a most delightful manner, and her interest in the cause of the board was very evident. The proceedings were recorded by that most efficient secretary, Mrs. B. F. Franks. Among the visitors present were Rev. A. W. Andes, Mrs. J. F. Morgan, and this writer, the latter being there in the capacity of Conference mission secretary.

Of the many important things discussed and decided upon, the most important, I think, was the decision to hold a missionary Conference, or a one-day school of missions, on the first Saturday in May, 1925. This Conference is to be held at the Mayland Church, and a most interesting program is to be prepared, and we hope to have at least one person from every Church in the Conference attend this gathering, and more than one from a number of the Churches. Let us begin now to plan to be present. No Church can afford not to be represented at the great missionary gathering of the Valley Conference.

Winchester, Va. J. F. MORGAN.

LIBERTY, VANCE.

I just want to let SUN readers know that we are waking up down here at Epsom. With a pastor always advocating 100 per cent for Christ, we are trying to improve our standard as Christians. On the third Sunday in September, Dr. J. O. Atkinson filled the pulpit, with a wonderful sermon on the theme of "True Discipleship" (John 21:15-17). In this he showed us that as often as Jesus enquired of Peter, "Lovest, thou, me more than these?" just so often He commanded him, "Feed my sheep!" So we see it is not all to love Jesus, but we must work for Him. While we are not saved by works, lest any man should boast, yet when we love Him we will love His work—that of winning souls.

Then we had the great Ham-Ramsey revival to come to our town. This was indeed a great inspiration to every one that attended. One of Mr. Ham's great themes was "How to Discern a Christian." He said you did not have to ask or be told, as a true Christian was always known; that the moment we ever thought ourselves better than another, we sealed ourself against God's using us in any way. But humble yourselves before the Lord and He will lift you up. We got busy to examine ourselves and see where we stood. The way is so straight and clean we fear there are but few traveling therein. I want to say, in passing, that any place is blessed that has the Ham-Ramsey party to visit it.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson VIII—November 23, 1924.

Subject: "The Transfiguration."

Golden Text: "This is my Son, my chosen: hear ye him."—Luke 9:35.

Lesson: Luke 9:28-36.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 86:1-7.

Reference Material: Matt. 17:1-8; Mark 9:2-8.

When one sets out to write about the transfiguration, like Peter, "he wists not what to say." It is one of those great experiences which is to be pondered rather than to be written about. As Dr. Charles R. Brown says, "The holy mount is a place to feel, to adore, to aspire, rather than to talk."

"Eight days after these saying"—the Master had been telling His disciples that "the Son of Man must suffer many things, and be rejected by the elders and the chief priests, and the scribes and be killed, and after three days rise again." And He spake the saying openly. The shadow of the cross had already fallen across His path, and He wanted the disciples to know about it. And in the days immediately following Peter's confession, Jesus had told His disciples that the way of supremacy was the way of self-denial and sacrifice. This is the background of the transfiguration.

He took with Him Peter and James and John. The Master was no respecter of persons; He played no favorites. But He did have the inner circle of those who were better prepared to enter into His deeper spiritual experiences, and on four occasions—at the raising of Jairus' daughter, at the grave of Lazarus, on the Mount of Transfiguration, and in the Garden of Gethsemane—He took Peter and James and John with Him. And they went up into the mountain apart. They needed to know more about the "way of the cross," and perhaps Jesus Himself felt the need of inward renewal as He faced the rugged way that led to Calvary.

"And as He was praying, the fashion of His countenance was altered." There was something real and vital about the Master's prayer-life. It not only renewed and transformed His inner life; it transformed His outward appearance. "His face did shine as the sun." But it was no unique experience which the Master had. When Moses returned from the mount where he had had moral insight into the great character and purposes of God, his face shone so that the perverse people could not look upon it. When Stephen saw what his persecutors could not see—the heavens opened and the spiritual forces as his allies—his face shone "as it had been an angel." Even today, when men really pray, their countenances are changed. He who holds communion with the Father who seeth in secret will have his countenance changed so that others may see it openly. And not only countenance, but character will be changed.

"And there appeared unto them Moses and Elijah." Both of these men were great in Israel's history. And both of them had passed mysteriously into the heavenly realm. It gave evidence of the reality of that sphere to have fellowship with these representatives of the law and the prophets. It is significant in this case, at least, that they talked with him about "his decease," or to use the literal word, "his exodus." Death was not to be an end; it was an exodus into a larger life and a larger ministry of service through His Spirit. Mountain-top experiences reveal great spiritual truths.

It was a great experience to be there with the Master in such select company. And Peter wanted to remain there. In fact, he suggested that they build three tabernacles and spend a while there. But this he said because "he wist not what to answer." It was one of those times in life when it is better to keep quiet. Alas, for Peter! he did not understand that spiritual experiences were not ends in themselves; they were means to an end—larger and better service.

"This is my beloved Son: here ye Him." The Father was again bearing testimony to His pleasure in the Son. He had received the Father's commendation as He had consecrated Himself to His work at His baptism. And now He receives the Father's commendation as He purposes to pay the utmost cost involved in that consecration. He who fully gives Himself to the divine plan will have need to go on the mount for strength to pay the price of that consecration.

And when they became afraid, the Master came and touched them. His touch banished fear and inspired courage. Would that we had more of the personal touch in religion in these days when everything is becoming so mechanized!

High Lights from the Mountain-Top.

1. Spiritual progress and power demands its price.
2. Spiritual experiences become richer as we share them with others.
3. The Master has rich experiences for all of us, but we are not ready for them.
4. Real prayer changes countenances and character.
5. The spiritual world is a real world.
6. Mountain-top experiences often reveal new demands on the spirit of consecration.
7. Privileges tend to selfishness.
8. Mountain-top experiences prepare for valley service.
9. Devotion may prompt what reason may not approve.
10. Because Jesus Christ is the Son of God, we should "hear Him."
12. The Master's touch banishes fear.
13. When one does not know what to say, he had better say nothing.
14. It is good to be on the mountain-top with the Master; it is just as good to walk with Him in the common-place paths of every-day life.
15. "Beautiful thoughts make a beautiful soul; and a beautiful soul makes a beautiful face."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: "Stewardship—Time and Service."

Scripture Reading: Jer. 1:4-10; Matt. 4:18-19; Eph. 5:16.

Daily Readings: M., Nov. 17, When to begin.—Eccl. 12:1-7. T., Nov. 18, Prayer for more time.—Isa. 38:1-22. W., Nov. 19, Using time aright.—Col. 4:5-6. T., Nov. 20, Undivided service.—Luke 16:9-13. We cannot give our abilities and money wholely to God without giving our time and service, too. At this service, the nearest to our period of Thanksgiving, the season when we should especially remember the things which our Father has done for us, we should meditate upon the opportunity for the definite decision of doing for our Father as our thankoffering. Great decisions are the secrets of definite accomplishments in all fields, and in making our offering to God we can give nothing better than what the poet sang:

"Take my life, and let it be consecrated, Lord, to Thee;
Take my moments and my days, let them flow in ceaseless praise;
Take my hands, and let them move at the impulse of Thy love;
Take my feet, and let them be swift and beautiful for Thee.
Take my will, and make it Thine—it shall be no longer mine;
Take my heart: it is Thine own—it shall be Thy royal throne.
Take my love; my Lord, I pour at Thy feet its treasure store.
Take myself, and I will be ever only all for Thee."

In giving to God our service and time, no one is limited. We always have an opportunity to give of ourself, and may we be so consecrated that in giving a part of ourself we shall not be doing wrong to those whom we help. In giving our service and time, we influence others where money will not. We are all filled with enough wealth that we may give at least some time where our financial condition will not permit us to do so.

For the Meeting.

How much do you owe God? What efforts are you doing to pay Him?

Do you have anything? Can we rightfully say, "This is mine?"

Has God ever given any time to us? How much service can we give back to God? When and where shall we begin?

What satisfaction is there in giving of our time and service?

Should we prepare ourselves if we are going to give our service to God, or should we just depend upon Him for strength?

How shall we be best fitted for service to Him? What do you consider as logical steps in preparation to give Him our best?

NOTICE.

The congregation of First Christian Church, Raleigh, N. C., will hold the opening service in the new Church Sunday, November 23d. The program calls for three services—11 A. M., 2:30 P. M. and 7:30 P. M. We trust that we shall have many of our friends with us on this occasion.

Work was begun on the Church a little more than a year ago, and the corner-stone was laid June 8th. The building, when completed and equipped, will cost approximately $110,000.

A cordial welcome awaits you. Come and rejoice with us.

EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE TO MEET.

The committee on education will hold a meeting on November 18th. As a matter of information, we state that this committee considers applications for licensure, and ordination of ministerial candidates. Members of committee are: Revs. J. Lee Johnson, H. Scholz, W. C. Wicker, and R. L. Williamson.

R. L. Williamson, Chairman.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Christian Orphanage is your institution. It has in its care one hundred and nine children. It takes money to support that number of children. These children are fatherless children. They are looking to the Christian Church for support and training. They give you an opportunity through this institution to serve. They give you an opportunity to open your heart in sympathy and give, that they may have a chance in life. The Orphanage depends largely on the Thanksgiving offering to supply food and clothing through the winter.

Ten thousand dollars is our goal this year. Our Churches will have to make larger offerings this year than last if we reach this goal. One denomination in North Carolina gave its orphanage $75,000 for a Thanksgiving offering last year. Will our denomination in four States give its Orphanage $10,000 this year?

You give now. The Orphanage wants to give in return splendid young men and women, who may be doctors, lawyers, teachers, trained nurses and worthy citizens. Make your offering liberal.

I want to make this correction: In THE SUN of October 23, 1924, we gave Martha's Chapel Church credit for $10.70, which should have been credited to Catawba Springs.

The following have been sent in since last report: Mrs. Layton Murray, Virgilina, Va., 1 quilt; Mrs. S. A. Horne's Circle of Burlington Christian Church, 18 jars jelly, fruit and preserves, 12 bu. pears; Mrs. J. M. Hayes, 1 bu. pears; Mrs. G. M. Spain, Norlina, N. C., 1 skirt; Circle No. 5, Woman's Missionary Society, Burlington, N. C., 2 quilts, 1 pr. pillow-cases, 12 jars jelly, preserves, pickles and pears, 10 dresses.

REV. JOHN N. FARRELL.

BY REV. W. C. WICKER, D. D.

Rev. John N. Farrell was born in Chatham County, N. C., about 1825, and died in 1893, in Texas.

In 1845, he represented Hanks' Chapel, in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, at Apple's Chapel, and at New Providence in 1855. He was licensed to preach by the Conference at Pope's Chapel, in 1858. And at the Conference at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, in 1859, he reported as having preached regularly at two Churches. He was assigned to the Moore and Randolph circuit, which was composed of these Churches: Antioch, Shallow Well, Moore Union and Bethel.

In 1860, at the Conference at Pleasant Hill, in Chatham County, he was ordained to the gospel ministry by the presbytery composed of Elders W. H. Doherty, B. N. Hopkins and T. J. Fowler. The committee on itinerancy assigned him to the Cape Fear circuit—Christian Chapel, Antioch, Pleasant Spring, Wake Chapel, Pleasant Hill (Johnson), and Utley's. In 1862, at the Conference at Damascus, in Orange County, he served on the committee on statistics, and was again assigned to the Cape Fear circuit. At the Conference in 1864, at Antioch, in Chatham County, he served on the committee on home missions, and was assigned to the New Hope Association. The Churches he served this year were Damascus and New Elam.

He was present at the Conference at Oak Level, in Franklin County, in 1865, and was elected a delegate to the Southern Christian Convention. He was appointed on a special committee, with Rev. H. B. Hayes, on the standing of the ministry. In 1866, at the Conference at O'Kelly's Chapel, he was assigned to the charge composed of New Elam, Damascus, Antioch, and Zion, and appointed, with Revs. J. W. Hatch, W. D. Moffitt and E. W. Beale, fraternal messengers to the Deep River Conference.

In 1867, at Union Chapel, in Alamance County, he served on the committee on temperance; he was also present at the Conference at Salem Chapel, in Forsythe County, in 1868. At this Conference a Sunday School Convention was organized, and he was the delegate to it from New Elam. Though absent from the Conference at Union, in Halifax County, Va., in 1870, he was assigned to Pleasant Hill (Chatham County) and Pleasant Grove, N. C. He attended the Deep River Conference as a deliberate member. He attended in 1871 the Conference at Mt. Zion, in Orange County, and reported in charge of three Churches and a mission point; eighty-three conversions, forty-eight accessions, thirty-four baptized, and three couples married.

At the Conference at Shallow Well, Moore County, in 1872, he served on the committee on Sabbath Schools, and had charge of two Churches and received twenty-eight members into the fellowship of the Church. He attended the Conference at New Providence in 1873, and had charge of Catawba Springs and Wake Chapel, and received thirty-five into the Church. He was chairman of the committee on temperance at the Conference at Hanks' Chapel in 1874. He attended the Deep River Conference at Pleasant Grove, and preached from Romans 10:14, and was appointed on the presbytery of ordination, with Revs. A. S. Nelson and J. S. Lawrence, to ordain Wm. G. Brady and H. A. Albright. He was a fraternal messenger from the North Carolina and Virginia Conference at Shiloh, in Randolph County. At the Conference at Pope's Chapel, he raised the question as to whether the local Church had the right to license a member to preach. The Conference decided in the negative. He was chairman of the committee on temperance.

In 1876, he had charge of Catawba Springs and Wake Chapel, but had no charge in 1878. In 1879 he had moved to Texas, where he continued to preach. He reported in 1884 that he had organized one Church, and would organize another soon. For many years he was a most zealous and untiring worker in the Conference. In 1891, his post-office was Gregory, Texas. He labored in Texas about fifteen years. He died as he had lived, a triumphantly loyal member of the Christian Church.

MODERNISTS vs. FUNDAMENTALISTS.

We have always deplored religious controversies. It is a pity there are so many stirring Zion now. There is no telling to what length and depth and height these controversies can go, as is shown from the following account taken from the Northwestern Christian Advocate:

"They do have a queer way of debating fundamentalism and modernism among those colored Baptists in Chicago. They do it with razors, open knives, parasols, hymn books and fists. One woman was stabbed, scores received cuts, bruises and other minor injuries in the riot. The modernist pastor of the Church was offering a long and fervid prayer when a former pastor, and a fundamentalist, entered the Church and tried to force his way to the pulpit. The pastor brought his prayer to a sudden end, and the two pastors stood and hurled burning accusations at each other. Hymn books then began to fly and parasols of every hue were wielded as feminine members of the congregation went into action. Razors then began to appear, but perhaps because of the surrounding religious atmosphere no one was seriously carved up. A fundamentalist was stabbed in the back, but will recover."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

PAUL TO THE GALATIANS.

The epistle to the Galatians is one of the most human of documents. It was born out of controversy and it bears the marks of the conflict in both its thought and style. It has been associated with controversy all through the Church's history. Galatians is of priceless worth because it sets forth the fundamental principles of the gospel. It shows the conditions of salvation; it deals sharply with so-called gospels which will not save. Its doctrine is that salvation is through faith in Christ alone; the alternative proposed was to require the observance of national rites, peculiar to Judaism, as the means of grace and way of life. Galatians was written, therefore, because men had attempted to build a barrier between the soul and God. Paul's treatment of the situation applies to all similar efforts. The temptation before which the Galatians fell is one which constantly besets the Church. There seems to be a natural tendency in that direction. Paul's argument against it is, therefore, of permanent value.—Selected.

SHUTTING EYES TO WRONG FOR FEAR OF GIVING OFFENSE.

"He that knoweth to do right and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—Jas. 4:17.

"If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin." —Jas. 2:9.

"Whoso committeth sin is the servant of sin." —Jno. 8:34.

To have knowledge of a wrong and do nothing to stop it is as criminal as committing the wrong personally. If you know that a force is active among the "very best people in town" and it is teaching your child to be a "crook," are you going to keep still and let it go on? Do you think about whom you would offend by your opposition?

Or have you sense enough to realize that association in the most exclusive circles cannot make your child honest if his heart is black?

Any person, club or society which teaches that because you have been "stung" you should go out and do likewise to another so as to get back what you lost by allowing yourself to be roped in, is as criminal in intent and purpose as the highwayman who makes his living by being a thug.

If the fear of being unpopular deters you from taking a stand squarely against such methods, you are a poor stick of a man, woman, girl or boy.

If you have young folks under your care and you do not take a stand and show your disapproval of such unprincipled conduct because you fear the displeasure of your young charges, you do not deserve the confidence of the parents. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to be like our Master, who dared to do right under all circumstances. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

CARELESS CHRISTIANS.

"Fill up . . . that which is lacking."—Col. 1:24-27.

This verse of Scripture should be burned into the minds and upon the hearts of every negligent Church member in the land. Their number is legion. What Paul said is explicit. Christ suffered for the sins of the world and bequeathed to his followers a share in His suffering. To paraphrase Paul: "The cup of His suffering is not yet full—help me to fill it."

Here is a description of the slack Church member. He pledges a pitiful dole to the Church and missions; but he does not pay his pledge until the Church treasurer has spent a yearly percentage in postage and stationery and time to collect. Besides that, the delinquent expects frequent pastoral calls—and even that brings him to Church only occasionally to service.

He may thus actually cost the Church more than he contributes. Every such man or woman should consider the plain facts. The careless one may get mad and leave the Church—but, economically, the congregation might profit.

Experience likewise shows that the negligent Church member will more often be won to doing his part through plain speaking than by much coddling. The truth, when he sees it clearly, will very likely help to a better understanding.—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

IN THE MIDST OF STORM.

"But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken."—Jonah 1:4.

Every life is like a ship that puts out to sea. If the ship safely passes through the storms and reaches the port, it blesses the port from which it sailed and the one which it reaches. If it is wrecked, not only is there loss of ship and crew, but also the valuable cargo that means so much to so many is lost. How strikingly similar are the circumstances of the ship in which Jesus and the disciples were passing over Galillee and the one that was going to Tarshish, carrying the prophet Jonah! In the first, there was the storm, the fear, the sleeping Master, the cry, the command, "Peace, be still," and then the calm. In the other, the storm, the fear, the sleeping Jonah, the cry, the prayer, the overthrow of Jonah, and the calm. And yet how different! In the first, the trouble is on the outside; in the second, it is both on the outside and within. And the trouble within causes the trouble without. It is wisdom to cast overboard anything that would destroy the ship; and anything that disturbs us from within and causes trouble without should be abandoned. If we search for the reason for that which troubles us most, we may often find it sleeping within.

Prayer.—Our Father, Thy word is sweet unto us. It lightens our pathway and feeds our souls. Help us to hide it in our hearts and to meditate upon it until we shall know it and become free. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

IS IT WELL WITH YOUR SOUL?

"What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, and forfeit his life?"—Mark 8:34-37.

It is popular in certain quarters in these latter days to depreciate the importance of assuring our own soul's salvation. If this saving of our souls means a selfish absorption in our own spiritual state, to the exclusion of the good of others, then the protest against it is well taken. But if any have come to the conclusion that one's personal salvation is in antagonism to the service he might render to others, they are badly away from the truth. A heart that is right with God is a primary necessity to true Christian service. How often it has developed that the doing of public service has been hindered by private sins, and a career of great usefulness has been checked or thwarted by hidden follies! Before we can set out on the way of redeeming the lives of others, we must be freed ourselves from the tyranny of sin.

"What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" There is nothing that is possible to give without making a bad bargain. We need to search our lives, our pleasures, our aims, and make them all appear before the bar of conscience and answer for their influence. We must keep our soul inviolate at any price. We must be free, or drag about our chains. And we can only realize our best self by submitting to the keeping of the One of whom it is said, "If the Son shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—Rev. H. D. Ranns.

Prayer.—That we and our children should dedicate ourselves to the Lord more fully and give our best aid in every way to the extension of the kingdom on earth.

FRIDAY.

THE MARCH OF THE GOSPEL.

"The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach." —Acts 1:1-8.

Thus does Luke begin the Acts of the Apostles. The former treatise was the gospel of Luke, and it was a summary "of all that Jesus began to do and to teach." Now, Luke is writing another book called "The Acts of the Apostles." It is a kind of sequel to the gospel, a record of all that Jesus continued to do and to teach. Luke might have called his book "The Acts of Jesus Through the Apostles." There is material and room in these days for a book that could be called "The Acts of Jesus Through the Modern Apostles." The papers are full of incidents of consecrations and heroisms. The revelations of God, like his mercies, are new every morning. The canon of Scripture can never be closed. Every hour witnesses regeneration, emancipation and reform.

Let us go forth like Ruth of old, gleaning in the fields of religious endeavor and righteous effort, picking up the ripened grains of magnificent achievement and splendid accomplishments for our inspiration and cheer. Such a studious process will put the iron in our blood and arouse our sluggish pulse and lead us on to nobler effort and greater emulation in the task of extending the kingdom of God and crowning Jesus Christ as Lord of all.—Rev. Richard Braunstein.

Prayer.—That there may come, in these times in which we now live, a widespread revival throughout the world, and that the gospel of Jesus Christ may have free course in all lands.

SATURDAY.

THE LAW OF LIBERTY.

"So speak ye and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty."—Jas. 2:12-14.

There is a lawlessness which is worse than the things we know or read about in which we know of so much banditry, murder and scoffing at the law; it is that the laws of God are treated in the same way.

The Church no longer dictates to man God's idea of righteousness. No longer would parents or religious leaders coerce the smallest child into a conformity the child does not like. The authority of the Bible is not effective only as the reader desires it. It is still a lamp and light, but the great hosts nonchalantly stalk themselves free from its mandates.

Read the book of James. It is a book of liberty. He talks about it in a way which does not enjoin the old law particularly, but to bring in a better way, and he says that that law is nothing less than the spirit of Jesus Christ in the hearts of men. This is the only place where one may rightly be judged, and he who defies the altar of his own heart according to conscience in the principles of Jesus does so at his own loss of soul.

The Bible and the Church is authority of the truth of God, and it enlightens us, guides us, blesses us and we venture on living in its precepts.

Prayer.—Our Father, guide us by Thy divine wisdom in all our living, trusting in Thy help and Thy strength to surmount our difficulties. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

IN HIS SPIRIT.

"I was in His Spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 2:10.

Regarding the Sabbath Day, Mr. Gladstone, in 1854-'57, counseled: "Cherish it, resent any intrusion of worldly thoughts or conversation, except upon real necessity; strive to shut out rigorously any worldly business; always view the devotion of the day to God, not as a yoke, but as a privilege; and be assured that if and so far as this view of it seems overstrained, the soul is not in its health."

Prayer.—Our Father, so give us Thy Spirit, that we may commemorate each Sabbath as the day of the risen Lord. Guide us into thoughts, words, and deeds that bless, and may we walk in ways that show our love for Thee. In His name we ask it. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

KIDDIES' KORNER DEARS:

Your editor has not forsaken you. Instead of that, she is really pleasing you by asking Mother to write you some stories for the Korner. Mother loves you as much as your editor; and "Rusty" loves you, too, and "Dynamite," too. And now, over here where I live, there is another doggie, whose name is "Ponjola Dan," and he is just as little as his name is big. There are two kitty-cats living here, too. The kitty-cats are jealous of "Ponje," and Ponje is jealous of the kitty-cats; and sometimes we have a bad ol' quarrel—Mother "Winkie" is one of the kitty-cats, and "Teeny" is the other one. Mother Winkie and Teenie eat their dinners off of a clean, nice paper, and never spill a bit on the floor; but Ponje is such a mischievous little doggie that he won't eat in any one place long at a time. He wiggles this way, and that way, until his mistress has to scold him, and scold him, and then what do you think? He gets mad; oh-eeee! as mad as can be, and growls and growls around till—one day not long ago he got a spanking. Yes, he did! But he's such a dear wee doggie! we love him anyway, even if he is naughty.

I have something to tell you next week; something that's just happened to your editor. Will you want to know?

Good-by, dears—you, and you, and all you other yous! I love you all.

Your editor,
MADGE F. MOFFITT.

WHEN RAGGY MAGGY WENT TO THE PARTY.

By Linda Stevens Almond.

Raggy Maggy lived in an old trunk in the attic. Although she almost never went anywhere or saw any one, she was one day invited to a party. It was the first invitation that she had ever had—an invitation to a party to be given by a doll whose name was Gwendolyn Rosamund Marmaduke. Such a beautiful name! But Gwendolyn Rosamund was beautiful herself.

The invitation was printed on shiny, pink paper, in shiny, gold letters. It said: "You are invited to come to Gwendolyn Rolamund Marmaduke's party at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. R. S. V. P."

Raggy Maggy did not know what "R. S. V. P." means, so she asked Susanne Marie, who had run up to the attic to see whether Raggy Maggy had been invited to the party. Susanne Marie was a French doll who had come all the way from Paris, and who was very snobbish. She thought it stupid of Raggy Maggy not to know what "R. S. V. P." meant, but she was polite enough not to say so. She explained that it stood for several French words that meant "reply, if you please."

Raggy Maggy was grateful to Susanne Marie. Of course she wanted to do the proper thing, and so she searched the attic, and finally, in a little oak desk, she found a sheet of doll paper, on which she wrote carefully:

"Raggy Maggy accepts, with pleasure."

Then she looked over her wardrobe. O dear! There was not a dress fit to wear. She did not even have a party dress. She felt sad indeed. It was bad enough not to have a party dress, but to be obliged to go in a raggedy dress was perfectly dreadful. Raggy Maggy cried for nearly an hour. She was almost sorry that she had accepted the invitation.

But after a while she began to feel better. She dried her eyes with the edge of her raggedy dress and sat down to think. "I will get out my workbasket and mend my dress as well as I can. Then I will wash and iron it carefully and forget that it is an old dress; and I will go to Gwendolyn Rosamund's party and have a beautiful time." And such a broad and bright smile overspread Raggy Maggy's face that she really looked beautiful.

So she set to work. The rents and the rips in her raggedy dress she sewed up with such fine, neat stitches that the mending was a work of art. Then she washed it and hung it on the line. When it was dry, she ironed it, oh, so carefully! And then she forgot all about its being an old, faded dress, and the next day at 3 o'clock in the afternoon she went to Gwendolyn Rosamund Marmaduke's party.

It was a delightful party. Mrs. Marcella Marmaduke, Gwendolyn Rosamund's mother, always gave delightful parties. It was held in the garden under the hollyhocks. When Raggy Maggy got there, two little dolls dressed in fluffy pink tulle began to laugh, and ran behind a chair and peeked out. It was a rude and unkind thing to do, for they were making fun of Raggy Maggy's old faded dress.

Mrs. Marcella Marmaduke spoke sharply to them, but Raggy Maggy said, "Maybe they're just playing peek-a-boo."

That made every one laugh, and so put every one into a good humor, and the two dolls in pink tulle whispered to Raggy Maggy that they were sorry, and Raggy Maggy forgave them.

They played all kinds of doll games, and sometimes the dolls quarreled, but Raggy Maggy always got them to "make up." She was kind to the least little doll too, and then when refreshment time came she helped Mrs. Marcella Marmaduke. Best of all, she was always in a good humor and always had a happy smile for every one.

Such wonderful refreshments as they had at that party—rose-petal sandwiches, marigold tarts, dewdrop ade and dollollipops! And wasn't there a beautiful prize? And didn't Raggy Maggy win it? It was a lovely pink-satin party dress, trimmed with scallopy lace and tiny rhinestone buckles. Susanne Marie, who came all the way from Paris and should have known what she was talking about, said that it was by far the handsomest dress that she had ever seen.

All the dolls were asking one another why Raggy Maggy had won the prize.

"Goodness!" cried Mrs. Marcella Marmaduke, as if it were stupid of them to ask such a question; "don't you really and truly know? Raggy Maggy has won the prize, first of all, because she is the most polite doll at the party, and then because she is kind and good-natured and industrious. Look at her dress and see how beautifully it is mended and how carefully it is washed and ironed. Remember that fine feathers don't always make fine birds."

At that, all the dolls looked very, very thoughtful. Then suddenly, for they were really kind-hearted dolls, they ran over to Raggy Maggy and told her how glad they were that she had won the prize; and then all together they cried: "Next time come to our house, dear Raggy Maggy!"

WILL'S GIFT.

Once there was a boy named Will. His folks were poor and didn't care anything for Will. One day he had a letter from his uncle, asking for him to come out West and help him, for he needed a boy his size. But his parents refused to let him go. They said there was plenty of work there. He had to wear old clothes, his father had, and he worked hard every day, even on Sunday. One day a missionary came to the town and started a little Church. Will wanted to go, but he had to work Sunday.

One morning he got up early and did his work. So he went to Sunday School, and had a good teacher. After it was over, he came home and told his mother about it. She said she didn't care anything about the Lord. Will went to Church the next Sunday, and told his teacher. The next day, the teacher came to Will's home and told them about the Lord. One day Will cut his foot and could not walk for a month. When he was out, he went to Church and thanked the Lord for His kindness.

Once a message came that their uncle was dead and left a lot of money to Will. Will soon became rich, and he went to the little Church and thanked the Lord for His gift to him.

A LIE STICKS.

A little newsboy, to sell his papers, told a lie. The matter came up for conversation in a class in Sunday School. "Would you tell a lie for 3 cents?" asked a teacher of one of her boys.

"No, ma'am," answered Dick very promptly.

"For 10 cents?"

"No, ma'am."

"For a dollar?"

"No, ma'am."

"For a hundred dollars?"

"No, ma'am."

"For a thousand dollars?"

Dick was staggered. A thousand dollars looked like such a very big sum. Oh, what lots of things he could buy with a thousand dollars! While he was thinking about it, and trying to make up his mind whether it would pay to tell a lie for a thousand dollars, a boy behind him cried out—

"No, ma'am!"

"Why not," asked the teacher.

Now, mark this boy's answer, and don't forget it.

"Because, ma'am," said he, "the lie sticks. When the thousand dollars are all gone and the good things bought with them are all gone, too, the lie is there all the same."

This we should never forget—"the lie sticks!" And it is this that makes the punishment of lying so great, even when we repent of the sin and get it pardoned.

DAISIES IN THE MOONLIGHT.

By Luella M. Pendleton.

Oh, the Daisies in the moonlight
In the lovely month of June,
And the children dancing gaily
To a merry little tune.

Hand in hand, they circle lightly
Till we say, "A fairy ring,"
Little children in the moonlight
Gaily dance and gaily sing.

Daisy heads are nodding brightly,
All the children love them so,
Swaying, swaying in the moonlight
Back and forth, and to and fro.

Moonlight, daisies, little children,
All the world now seems in tune—
Shining, swaying, singing, dancing
In the merry month of June.

"We are but children, and as long as our hearts remain warm and human we can never get tired of that beautiful thing—a 'surprise.' "—Daily Express.

A MOTHER OF MISSIONAIRIES AND MINISTERS.

In the library of Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va., there is an old Church deed, dated January 18, 1753. It is probably the oldest original deed that can be found for a piece of Church property in the whole Southern Presbyterian Church. When the deed was written, the Church was described as "Ye congregation belonging to the Lower Meeting House between ye Yatkin River and the Cutabo do, adhering to a minister licensed from or by Presbytery belonging to the old Synod of Philadelphia." For the past one hundred and fifty years it has been known as Thyatira Church, and is located ten miles west of Salisbury, N. C.

The fall meeting of Concord Presbytery was recently held in this old Church, and it was my privilege to attend. It is the Church of my first love. I was born and brought up within its bounds. It was there that I was baptized, that I attended Sunday School and Church services when I was a child, and it was there that I made my profession of faith in the Lord Jesus. My name is still on the rolls of the old Church. It has never been anywhere else. Of course, it was a rare privilege to go back and preach the opening sermon at the meeting of my presbytery.

While Thyatira is about the oldest Presbyterian Church in North Carolina, it is not decadent. In fact, it is the liveliest old Church that I know anything about. It is literally teeming with young life.

During my stay there, my mind naturally did a good deal of reminiscing. Among other things, I recounted the number of men who have gone into the ministry and the number of women who have gone as foreign missionaries from this old Church during the present generation. Nine men have been ordained to the ministry. Eight of these are still living and occupying places of usefulness in the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, two being in the foreign field. One young man is in the junior class at Union Theological Seminary, and two young men are at Davidson College as candidates for the ministry. Four women from this Church are now at work on the foreign field, and two others are volunteers well advanced in their preparation. This Church well deserves to be called the mother of ministers and missionaries.

During the meeting of presbytery, a thoughtful minister asked me why it is that this one Church has furnished so many ministers and missionaries. A full answer to that question might be of value to other Churches. I am going to try to answer it in part.

1. This has been a Christian community with Christian ideals for at least one hundred and seventy-five years. It is a great thing to be brought up in an atmosphere that is Christian. Environment is not everything, but it has a large influence on the life of the young.

2. The homes from which these ministers and missionaries have come were Christian homes, without a single exception. In the large majority of these homes, the fathers were elders or deacons in the Church. In every case, the mother was a devout Christian. After all, it is in the home that we find the mothers of ministers and missionaries.

3. The Church has had a line of noble pastors. If the minister is the ideal of the boy in the Church, that boy is bound to think of the ministry as his life-work, whether the minister ever preaches on a call to the ministry or not. If the minister is not the boy's ideal of all that he ought to be, it is hardly worth while for him to say anything to the boy about a call to the ministry. If the minister is an ideal for the boys and then presents the call, the call will come to the boy with double emphasis. Thyatira Church has been richly blesed in its pastors.

4. For years, the teacher of the class for boys and young men was a very intelligent elder, in whose life there was a deep spiritual note. Numbers of us who went into the ministry call his name blessed.

5. In 1884, the old Church built a schoolhouse within fifty yards of the Church, and started a classical school under the auspices of the Church. A young man of high ideals and of unusual piety and consecration took charge of the school. He had the great gift of awakening in boys a kind of holy ambition to be something and to do something. Among other things, he organized the young men and boys into a prayer meeting and taught us to lead the meeting and to lead in prayer. He inspired in us a desire to go to college. It was during his day that this stream of ministers and missionaries began to go out from the old Church.

6. When once the stream started, the effect became cumulative. As the first young candidates returned from time to time to visit their homes and their Church, they were living witnesses to the other boys and young men of the community, calling their attention to the ministry. As the years have gone by, this influence has been more and more cumulative, so that at this time the old Church has more candidates for the ministry and the missionary field than ever before in her history.—Walter L. Lingle, in the Presbyterian of the South.

THE WAY TO HEALTHY SLENDERNESS.

By Helena Lorenz Williams.

It may not be true that no one loves a fat man, but though he were even more beloved than his slenderer brother, it would be folly for him to acquire an excess of avoirdupois. Why? For the simple reason that he will not live very long to enjoy the world's devotion. A fat man, or a fat woman, for that matter, is a bad risk, from the life insurance standpoint. Any insurance examiner will agree to this. For, overweight necessitates overactivity of the vital organs and their consequent premature exhaustion.

If one is in doubt as to what class one belongs, in this respect, and loves the world sufficiently to wish to remain in it as long as possible, the first step is to get a height and weight chart from the doctor or a life insurance company. Then, if the verdict is "overweight," cut down on the sort of foods that put on the extra pounds. If this method fails to produce results, then the doctor should be consulted, for the increasing bulk may be the result of some physical condition requiring medical attention.

Glowing magazine advertisements notwithstanding, there is no permanent or really healthful method of weight reduction which does not include a regulated diet. Bread, butter, sugar, cream, oil, spaghetti, potatoes, cheese, pastry, and other fatty or starchy foods must be eliminated entirely. Instead, eat extra quantities of vegetables, such as spinach, kale, lettuce, parsnips, egg plant, kholrabi, green peas, string beans, beets, tomatoes, dandelions and whatever else the market affords. Next, walking or some other form of regularly taken exercise which is not too violent for the condition of the heart, should be increased.

There is only one easy way to be thin, and that is not to allow oneself to get fat in the first place, by watching the scales and taking determined action as soon as the first undesired pound or two appear. But if one has once begun to ignore the increasing circumference of one's waistband, nothing is so necessary as courage and perseverance in reducing healthfully. These, however, are indispensable for success in anything, and what is there more vital in life than health?

The overweight person is not immune to such serious diseases as tuberculosis, according to the National Tuberculosis Association. This organization and its affiliated associations spend large sums yearly to help teach the American public how to eat healthfully. The seventeenth annual Christmas seal sale, which furnishes funds for this work, will be held throughout the country during December of this year.

REV. DR. S. A. HOWELL SPEAKS.

To the Ministers, Deacons, and Members of the Eastern Virginia (Negro) Christian Conference—Greeting in Jesus' name:

The time for the annual session of our Conference is near at hand, and I take this method of asking all members of the Conference to do their full duty this year. The Conference meets with Zion Christian Church, Nansemond County, near Suffolk, Va., Tuesday, November 18th, Rev. J. B. Jones, pastor.

Every member of this our great Church is assessed $1.25 per year, and it is hoped that each minister and officer of the Church will see that each member of his Church does full duty.

Every department of our great Church needs money, and it should be the prerogative of each member to do his bit in furnishing the needed amount to make our Church function like other Churches.

The missionary department needs money to carry out its plans; also the educational department needs money to accomplish its ends. Our ministry must be better educated. The pew is being educated, and an educated pew will not follow an uneducated ministry; therefore, we should all strive to do our whole duty, and assist our general Church in putting over the educational program which has been so ably begun.

The board of control of Franklinton Christian College is now erecting a very spacious dormitory for the accommodation of our girls; therefore, it is the bounden duty of every Christian Conference to do its full duty to raise means for the payment of the same.

The Virginia Christian Conference has pledged itself to raise $800 for this occasion, and the management is looking for this amount. Please exercise much wisdom in getting out your delegates. Select those who love God, and have denominational pride and love for their Church. We want this Conference to be the best of any previous years. Now, to accomplish this end, we, ministers, delegates, and visitors, must go up to the Conference with the mind of Christ in us. Let us all work and pray mightily to God to give us the best Conference we have ever witnessed.

Those coming from the northern part of the field will come by way of the Southern Railroad, on the morning train, and will be met at Lumis, Va. Those coming from the west will also come on the Southern Railroad to Holland, Va., on the east-bound morning train. There will be conveniences at each depot to meet the delegates.

Yours in His name,

S. A. Howell, President.

WHO SHOULD GO TO THE FOREIGN FIELD?

Who should go to the foreign field? No question should be more important. "Record of Christian Work" gives a statement by Prof. Yohan Masih, of India, which is an answer:

"Some of us have been greatly distressed during the last few years over the type of some missionaries sent out. India does not need men and women from Europe and America to go to teach her people how to play billiards, nor do we need missionaries who merely tell India that Jesus Christ is one of the great teachers of the world. India has yearned for centuries for the vision of the great God. 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.' It is a new heart that India requires, a transformation of life and character. Who can give that to India except a divine Saviour? Send us missionaries who are not ashamed of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who are not ashamed of the cross, men and women who are living in close personal touch with the Master, men and women who have sat at His feet! They will meet Lord's needs."—"Christian Evangelist."

CLEM.

John K. Clem was born August 23, 1844, and died October 17, 1924. His age was eighty years, 1 month, and 24 days. He spent most of his life in Powell's Fort, was a highly respected citizen, and one of the oldest members of Joppa Christian Church. Bro. Clem's home was always a favorite stopping-place for the preachers who passed that way.

He is survived by one son and three daughters, and twelve grandchildren. A large congregation attended the funeral services, which were held at Joppa, October 19, 1924. A. W. ANDES.

GAY.

On Wednesday, October 29th, Bro. N. B. Gay passed from this life to his reward. Bro. Gay had entered into his seventieth year. In his later years he had been a great sufferer, but all his suffering seemed to draw him nearer to God and cause him to trust Him more and more to the end.

He was faithful to his home and family, he was faithful to his Church, and his God. His life was a great comfort to his pastor. As he neared the end, his faith seemed to be firmer, and his hope brighter; he said that he had lived as long as he desired to live, and wished to go and be with God. The last song that he asked me to sing was "Higher Ground," or "Pressing On the Upward Way." The last words that he spoke to me was, "May the Lord bless you and the work that you are trying to do."

He has passed from this earth to his reward, but it will be some time before he will be forgotten. He will be missed in the home, in the Church, in the community. He leaves a wife and three daughters and a host of friends to mourn their loss, but we weep not as those that have no hope. So my earnest prayer is that God's richest blessings may rest and abide with all of his loved ones and all that weep, and may we so live that God may be honored and His kingdom advanced in the world, that when we have finished our work here we may hear, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," and through Jesus be permitted to enter that home of rest that has been prepared for the children of God.

Two Women Elected Governors.—

In the recent elections, two women were chosen to head States. Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson was elected Governor of Texas, and Mrs. Nellie T. Ross, Governor of Wyoming. Mrs. Ferguson's husband was impeached and dismissed from the gubernatorial office in Texas in 1917. Mrs. Ross' husband died in office as Governor of Wyoming some months ago.

These two women are the first to hold high executive offices. A number of women have served in the legislative branches of the various States and the nation, and several women have been appointed to prominent judicial positions, but none have so far held high offices in the executive department of either State or nation.

Senator Lodge Dies.—

Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, the senior senator from Massachusetts, died on November 9th, at Cambridge, Mass. Senator Lodge had served in the Senate since 1893. His work there was of a high order. It was in the fight against the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations that Senator Lodge became so widely known. As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and as Republican floor leader in the Senate, it fell to him to lead the fight. Senator Lodge was the author of the Lodge reservations to the League treaty.

In the passing of this author, statesman, and eminent American citizen, the country has sustained a great loss. He died at the age of seventy-four, and he has left the world a heritage of a life well spent. He was the author of many books on biographical and historical subjects. For six years he held a professorship in Harvard University, from which he held a Ph. D. The Republican party will miss this leader and wise adviser. It is probable that Senator Borah, from Idaho, will succeed Senator Lodge as Republican floor leader in the Senate.

The Toll of Good Roads.—

A report from the Census Bureau of the United States brings some startling facts to mind. It reminds us that we are paying a high toll in human life for the beautiful highways of which we boast and for the increased transportation facilities. It points out that the highway fatalities for 1923 were 22,721, an increase over 1922 of 3,418. The 1923 death rate for highway accidents was 20.4 per 100,000 population, as contrasted with 17.6 in 1922. This increase was largely due to the growth in automobile accidents, which shows an increase of 2,776 fatalities over the previous year. The highway accidents are estimated as follows: train grade-crossing accidents, 2,268; street car accidents, 2,006; automobile accidents, 16,452; motorcycle accidents, 336; injuries by other vehicles, 1,559.

A fearful toll this which our highways are taking, and it should provoke much thought looking toward its prevention. We should, as individuals, determine to prevent, each of us, his part in this death toll to the gigantic transportation system of our roads.

The American Elections.—

President Coolidge was carried back to the White House for the next four years on what is said to be the greatest landslide in the nation's history. He carried thirty-six out of the forty-eight States. John W. Davis, the Democratic candidate, carried eleven, all of them Southern States, which were certain. Robert M. LaFollette, the third-party candidate, carried only one State —his own, Wisconsin. Mr. LaFollette polled about four million popular votes throughout the country, but scattered so as not to carry any State except his own. The number of votes cast for LaFollette equalled the number cast for Theodore Roosevelt in 1912, but Mr. Roosevelt carried eight States and had eighty-five electoral votes. Mr. Coolidge will have 373 votes in the electoral college, where former President Harding had 404, but President Coolidge polled more popular votes than did his predecessor.

It is reported that a number of the members of the present Cabinet are anxious to retire to private life, and that some changes may be expected under the new administration. Secretary James J. Davis, head of the labor portfolio, has already made such a desire known to the President. An appointment of a successor to late Secretary of Agriculture Wallace may be expected at an early date, since an acting secretary can only hold office for thirty days. It is rumored that Assistant Secretary Howard M. Gore may be appointed to the position until March 4th, when he becomes Governor of West Virginia.

Somewhere it is Worse.—

Rev. A. A. Kidwell, of Johannesburg, South Africa, who has just completed an extensive tour in this country, making a special study of negro education, said, speaking of the educational progress of the race in this country: "I have been particularly pleased. In South Africa it is popularly supposed that the educated negro is a failure. Here I find that just the reverse is true. The American people seem to recognize that education affects the negro just as it does anybody else, making him more capable, more efficient, a better citizen, and an asset to society. Your system of universal public education is based on that theory, and from what I have seen I am convinced that the theory is correct. I have been deeply impressed also, and even astonished at the economic competence which American negroes are achieving—their success in agriculture, industry and business. Your big negro insurance companies, banks, real estate corporations, construction companies and the like have no parallel anywhere else in the world, so far as I know; certainly not in South Africa." Dr. Kidwell admits frankly that conditions in South Africa are worse than here, and that laborers suffer under handicaps much more severe. He praised the work of the Interracial Commission, and declared that its methods should be applied the world round wherever racial friction occurs. There is scant comfort in the knowledge that racial relations are worse elsewhere; but it is good to know that we in America are making some progress in the right direction.

The Position of Youth.—

The position of youth toward the Churches was clearly stated in a speech before the Church congress recently held in Oxford, England, by Mr. Stephen Neill, of Trinity College, Cambridge—a candidate for the ministry. Mr. Neill said in part, "We are passionately stirred by the housing of the poor, by the tragedy of armaments, by the wrongs of oppressed nationalities. The Church seems so terribly taken up with the heating and lighting apparatus." What young men want particularly, he declared, "is to be shown Christ in life and work." The essence of their criticism was that the Church was not Christian, but rather a place of jealousy, intrigue, backbiting, malice, and all uncharitableness. No amount of Church-going could atone to youth for inconsistencies of conduct, and if Christ was not drawing this generation, it was simply because the Church was not holding him up.

Mr. Neill preferred grave charges in his statement of the position of youth, but they are well worthy of our careful consideration. We must reckon as a Church with the new youth movement, and, whether or not we are pleased with youth, it is into their hands that we must trust the world, and that shortly. It is our business to see that those hands are trained to receive the burden which we shall give to them, and to carry on the work of the kingdom. It demands our prayerful and thoughtful care of youth. We must listen to youth and find out what the young people are thinking, and then we must bring to them a religion adequate to meet their needs. It will require years, but it must be done. Time does not count when we reckon in terms of eternity. If we do not fit the hands of youth for the tasks which shall be shortly theirs, how then can they, not knowing, fit other hands for the same tasks? Let us think, and, thinking, may we labor seeking to understand youth sympathetically.

Our Raleigh Church throws open its doors on Sunday, November 23d to the public. We now have in Raleigh a building worthy of the best we can do for it, and one in which the whole denomination may indulge a pardonable pride.

Judge J. F. West spoke last Sunday morning at First Christian Church, Richmond. His appeal for home missions was well received, and a dozen or more memberships were taken into the Christian Missionary Association.

Rev. A. H. Sheppard changes his address from North Highlands, Columbus, Ga., to R. F. D. 2, Glenn, Ga. Bro. Sheppard has the same work that he had last year, and at present is working for Men and Millions in the Churches of the Georgia and Alabama Conference.

Students at Indiana University at Bloomington, Ind., are not permitted to motor outside the city of Bloomington and are denied the privilege of possessing an automobile while attending the university. The ban was placed on automobiles because of poor scholastic standing.

Conference secretaries will note from the Proceedings of the Southern Convention, last session, that Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., Suffolk, Va., who is secretary of the Convention, becomes editor of "The Annual," and to him all minutes of Conferences should be sent as early as possible. This done, we may this year expect an Annual of accuracy, economy and promptness. Dr. Johnson will do the work of editing efficiently and promptly—if he can get the Conference proceedings promptly.

SOME GREAT EXPERIENCES.

By W. P. FLETCHER.

On the way to the annual meeting of the various boards of our Church, the writer spent Sunday, October 12th, with Rev. E. C. Geeding, in his Advance and Old Union Churches. Bro. Geeding has the splendid plan of once a year bringing outside speakers to emphasize some special department of our Church's activities. October 12th was Christian Education Day, and later on other departments of our work will be similarly stressed. His congregations are thus kept in closest touch with all the work of the denomination.

A Great Work.

The week of October 19th to 26, both Sundays inclusive, was spent with Rev. L. D. Hammond and his Lima people. Some phase of religious education was brought before those attending each service of the Sundays and each evening of the week. The afternoons were devoted to interviews, and the mornings to visiting nearby Churches of the Northwestern Ohio Conference, and as far as possible meeting the pastors. The latter service was made possible by Bro. Hammond and his Ford. The Lima Church has not been erected very long, but already it is entirely inadequate for the work this splendid group of Christians desire to do for their Master and the boys and girls of their homes and city. In spite of the cramped and, in some instances, dismal quarters, good work is being done. The Church owns the lot immediately north of the Church, and the hope is that before long there may be erected a religious education plant commensurate with the fine, progressive spirit of Bro. Hammond and his workers.

A Great Plant.

Monday, October 20th, four or five hours were spent in Dover, Del. Sometimes people, having heard so much about Niagara Falls, are disappointed when they first see it. Much has been written about the Dover Church plant, but one is not disappointed at the first view; and, further examination gives further delight. The writer was led to thank God and take courage that a building so beautiful, so worshipful and supremely so useful in carrying on God's work had been dedicated to God's glory and the upbuilding of His people. One would be disappointed to find a perfect building, for then improvement, the joy of Christian life and service, would be impossible. The Dover social and dining-room, and the kitchen, both very fine in themselves, are not conveniently related, and the provision for intermediates seems to be weak; but this Church is bound to be an inspiration to builders in the Christian Church, and to others as well, for it is being visited by scores of people from all denominations.

A Great Conference in a Great Church.

The Eastern Virginia is a Conference of great men and women serving a great people and doing a great work. Their givings are away above the average of our own or other denominations, their reports both of ministers and Churches were full and fine, and their faith in God and themselves an earnest of still greater things. Nineteen of their ministers are graduates of Elon. Five ministers were this year received from other Conferences, and three were ordained. If this were the only meeting of the Conference it would seem to be entirely inadequate; but there is also held during the year a Conference gathering devoted entirely to missions, and one devoted to Christian education. The worship services were made more worshipful because they were conducted in the beautiful new Christian Temple, the floors, the walls, the ceiling, the organ, the acoustic properties of which all seem to say, "Come, let us worship and bow down."

A Great Sunday.

After the close of the Conference, short visits were made to the South Norfolk (where they are planning a beautiful new structure), Berkley, Portsmouth, and Holland Churches. Sunday, November 2d was spent with the Holy Neck, Franklin and Suffolk Churches. Holy Neck sits right out in the open country, but has wondrous possibilities with Dr. N. G. Newman as whole-time preacher and religious leader. After speaking at 10 A. M. to the boys and girls, a waiting auto took us thirteen miles to a worship and Communion service in the splendid town of Franklin, where Dr. Rowland gave for years such fine service and where Rev. F. C. Lester is so effectively carrying on. Once again we have a Church but recently built already inadequate to do the fullest work that is now demanded of a town this size. Our Churches should build not for today, but for tomorrow. In the evening we spoke to the Endeavorers of Suffolk, and at 7:30 had the privilege of addressing the regular evening congregation. This is the Church so lovingly and efficiently served for years by Dr. Staley, and is now receiving the impact of the consecrated brain and heart of Rev. H. S. Hardcastle. A visit to Suffolk makes one look and think and dream and pray for here stands (not lies) a giant, not asleep, but doing real things, and doing them with one hand. Eye hath not seen nor ear heard what can and will be done when this giant begins to sweat and work with both hands.

A Great Direction—Homeward Bound.

On the way north, meetings were held at Richmond, Va., Gulph Mills, Pa., and Machias, N. Y. Election excitement was about us everywhere, but in each place a faithful group came together to think and plan for larger things. Richmond has made great progress in its less than five years of work. They have already a beautiful place of worship, and plans for a fine building for religious education. Coming to Washington, the writer hungered to visit a Church of our people there, but we have no voice, not even an echo, in the Capital of the United States. Oh, that the work done in Richmond these last five years might now be done in Washington! If we have no Church in Philadelphia, we have one almost in its suburbs, where the hill-tops are crowned with the palaces of its millionaires.

Gulph Mills, with Philadelphia on one side and Conshohocken and Norristown on the other, cannot escape responsibility. Rev. J. C. Barrett and some of his fine folk see it and are almost oppressed by it, and are leading the way. Machias, N. Y., is the home of Rev. John M. Williams, the energetic young president of the New York Western Conference. Since coming here, Bro. Williams has helped his people reconstruct the Church building and has also spent much time and traveled many miles in behalf of his Conference.

THE C. M. A. TO MEET.

The good people of the Rosemont Christian Church are ready for 200 delegates, which they hope will attend the Christian Missionary Association, to meet with them December 2, 1924.

Take Money Point car at Union Station; get off at Rosemont Stop. There will be a welcome address and response, and a blessing asked when we eat. See THE SUN for the program. Come! We will be waiting and ready to receive you in "Southern style."

A MOMENTOUS STRUGGLE FOR CONTROL.

What is to be the fate of civilization? What is to be the ultimate destiny of mankind? Even an ordinary observer must look with the gravest concern upon the future of the human race. There is a momentous struggle now taking place on the vast stage of history, and discerning spectators in every nation are awaiting with bated breath the outcome. The gruesome tale of "Frankenstein" has taken on a colossal meaning in these modern days, and reflects with an awful symbolism our present world condition. In that ghastly story by Mary Godwin Shelley, it will be remembered, an ingenious medical student fashioned from materials found in graveyards and dissecting-rooms, a hideous monster that soon escaped the control of its creator, committed unspeakable atrocities, and finally killed its own maker.

With the simple amazing development of the physical sciences today, the material forces of the world bid fair, like the monster in "Frankenstein," to overleap the bounds of moral control and to wreak a universal devastation upon all civilization. The question of the hour is whether the sanctions of religion and righteousness can keep up with modern discoveries and inventions, that these may be controlled and used as instruments for the promotion of human welfare, and not for the destruction of the race. Does any one think that we exaggerate the seriousness of the present world situation? Let him stop for a moment and consider. The fact is, we are on the very threshold of another period more sinister in its possibilities than the so-called "Dark Ages."

The "Death Ray."

We have recently added to the long list of scientific discoveries that will be used in the next war another device embodying possibilities terrifying beyond description. We were inexpressibly shocked when during the great European struggle poison gas and flame-throwing were employed, but these inhuman methods pale into insignificance in the light of the developments in the science of warfare since the armistice was signed. New and more poisonous gases have been invented; explosives of higher power than any heretofore known are being manufactured; methods of spreading disease germs through whole enemy populations are being developed; larger and more powerful airplanes and submarines have been produced, or are in process of construction. And latest to swell the list of the growing powers of the modern "Frankenstein" monster is the "death ray." Its inventor, H. Grindell-Matthews, who recently arrived in America from Europe, admits that his new device is capable of putting whole armies out of action, paralyzing entire fleets of battleships, and even of destroying cities from a distance of several miles. In the course of an interview with a representative of the New York Times, Mr. Matthews was asked if his electrical beam had sufficient force to destroy New York in time of war. "The beam is more of a defensive than an offensive device," he replied, "and the country possessing it would be immune from attack by another power. I firmly believe that it could be used to destroy an army or to stun it, as I have demonstrated by first stunning and then killing the mouse in my experiments in England. An airplane could carry the beam easily, fly over a city and set it on fire, or stun the population so that the place could easily be captured. Within the next three or four months, the device will be developed to project the beam four or five miles. It travels as fast as light—186,000 miles a second. The beam consists of ether vibrations similar in a way to the wireless wave, though it employs a wave length which is radically different. Its form is complex, and it is a combination of five characters."

Where are we going? What is to be the fate of the race? Inventions such as poison gas, devices for the spread of disease germs, and the "death ray" reveal very plainly that the future holds in store nothing less than the complete downfall of civilization and the suicide of humanity, unless the forces of Christianity can overtake and bring under rational and moral control the conscienceless materialism that stalks threateningly among the nations in this very hour.

Does any one suppose for one moment that these new and terrible weapons will be used only in "defensive" warfare? In view of the events of the last ten years in Europe, is it conceivable that the "death ray," for example, will not be employed for the promotion of "trade" or for the subjection of so-called "inferior peoples" in the interest of a "higher world culture?"

A Race for High Stakes.

A monster destroyer is abroad in the world, daily taking on new and terrible powers from the discoveries of modern science, just now he is running wild, uncontrolled by the dictates of reason or morals; already he has done irreparable damage to humanity, and in his train everywhere are evidences of still greater destruction and death. And now, like the demon of "Frankenstein," this gigantic Archfiend, grown still more menacing, is about to turn on his maker and annihilate modern civilization itself.

Where is deliverance to be found? Who will save humanity from the "body of this death?" There is only one way of escape. The monster must be halted in his desperate course, brought under control, and made to serve the higher interests of the race. Unless this can be done, we are lost as we drive straight on to a stupendous world conflict whose vast proportions and fatal consequences no living man can estimate.

But where can be found a force sufficient to challenge and subdue the demon? In Christ alone there is hope. All else has failed. For the monster materialism has fed and fattened on scientific knowledge, commercial agreements, diplomatic understandings, and every other human scheme for curbing his irresponsible plungings. It is a desperate hour! Nothing less than the power of God can save the world. Only as Christianity gains control over men and women, over governments and international relationships, is there any safety of security anywhere for humanity.

"Awake, Thou that Sleepest!"

Christianity must harness the modern monster that threatens the world. Reason must displace force as a means to power in the thinking of men. Conscience must take precedence over self-will. Co-operation must be substituted for competition as the watchword of society. Here is the task. How is the Church of Jesus Christ meeting the situation?

While there are many reasons for optimism to be found in the growing spirit of evangelism, the enlargement of the missionary enterprise, the growth of the educational movement, and the development of earnest efforts for a new social order, nevertheless, from the standpoint of the moralization of life, organized Christianity is lagging far behind the rapid strides of scientific discovery. We are moving at a "poor dying rate." The Church is half asleep. It must be awakened. For the crisis is on even at this very hour, and the time is short. Let those who are "at ease in Zion" consider the astounding progress of materialistic development as contrasted with the comparatively feeble faltering of Christian idealism.

If the world is to be saved, there must come an unprecedented revival in the Church of Jesus Christ—a revival as comprehensive in its scope and purpose as the broad life of the world. It must begin in the souls of individual men and women, and must be so thoroughgoing as to put to shame that type of professional evangelist who relies on the mere signing of cards and the raising of hands as the evidence of success. The hearts of saints and sinners alike must be scoured of all unrighteousness. The souls of Christians, both ministers and laymen, must feel the "Woe is me!" and the urge of a "dying man unto dying men." A new zeal for the kingdom of God based upon the self-sacrifice of the cross itself must take possession of the Church. And the revival must go out of the Church door into the pulsing life of business, society, the nation, and the world. The refining fire must leap from Sunday to Monday and Tuesday and every other day of the week.

Christians need to be so "revived" that they will not only sing and pray, but will have courage to denounce evil in the world of affairs and in governments, and be brave enough in the face of criticism and ridicule to insist that the Jesus way of life shall prevail among the nations. It is no hour for compromisers, for weaklings, for men so busy admiring and analyzing their own religious feelings that they piously allow the world to go to the devil. We are in a death struggle for control with a menacing monster who threatens civilization and the very life of the world. "Awake, thou that sleepest!"—Editorial from Zion's Herald.

PUBLIC OPINION.

The man who tries to please everybody generally, pleases nobody. Long before the Christian era, Aesop illustrates this in his story of the old man who tried to conform to public opinion in the treatment of his donkey—all that he had —and not only miserably failed, but lost his donkey into the bargain.

In the course of a speech recently made in Perth, the "fair city" which Sir Walter Scott has rendered famous in one of his romances, Lord Dewar made some pointed observations on public opinion as it is today. He said that as one walked along life's highway, one would find that public opinion was "paradoxical at every turn from the cradle to the grave." For example, if a man did not succeed in his calling he was pronounced a failure. If he made money he was called a profiteer. If he went to Church on Sunday, he was a hypocrite; if he staid away, he was a sinner. If he gave to some public object, it was an advertisement; if he didn't, he was stingy.

The vagaries of public opinion have played too great a part in shaping the destinies of nations as well as individuals; thus occasions have arisen when dictators were found the only means of disentangling nations from the muddling of "many men of many minds." If individuals were to follow the conglomerate advice so freely handed to them by their friends, confusion and disaster would be inevitable. A man should be guided up to a certain point by the experience of others—this is only common sense—but his ultimate course must be shaped by his own reason. —Dearborn Independent.

ALBANY, N. Y.

At the evening service yesterday (Sunday, November 16th), our pastor, Rev. W. C. Hook, delivered a stirring address on the subject, "The Supreme Challenge to Youth," and at the close of which one of our most promising young men walked down the aisle and offered himself for the gospel ministry; also a young man of the Catholic faith announced himself for the priesthood.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH PIONEERING.

One often wonders why the Christian Church, never large in membership, has pioneered in so many important particulars. The Christian Church gave to the world its first religious newspaper. The Herald of Gospel Liberty, our general organ, is the first, and is now the oldest, religious newspaper in the world. The Christian Church pioneered in the matter of co-education, controlling as it did the first college that gave to women the same privileges that men had in higher education. The Christian Church pioneered in the matter of giving women the privilege to preach, being the first Church to ordain a woman to the ministry. The Christian Church pioneered in the matter of temperance in an organized manner; it was in a Christian Church that the first temperance society was organized in the United States. The Christian Church pioneered in the matter of adopting and being content with the name "Christian." Since then, other organizations have followed and are happy in the name, for example, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Women's Christian Association, the Christian Endeavor, and so forth.

There are many other particulars in which the Christian Church has pioneered. But the ones named will suffice for present purposes. One wonders why! Why is it that an organization so small numerically could give to the world so many new and important and worth-while ideas, enterprises and institutions? Is not the reason, and the sole reason, to be found in the fact that the Christian Church is founded on liberty as one of its basic principles—liberty of conscience, liberty of interpretation, liberty of personal and private judgment, liberty in and through the one name which we wear: the name of Christ, the great Apostle of liberty, who said, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free?"

It is the truth, knowing the truth, seeking the truth, teaching the truth that sets men's minds free to find and to found great interests, enterprises and institutions in His name.

CHURCH FINANCE.

All organizations have monetary expenses and problems, and the Church is no exception to that rule. It is as much a part of Church membership to support the Church financially as it is to support it spiritually. The highest commendation Jesus ever paid any one was what He said of the woman who cast into the treasury "two mites, which make a farthing," which was equal to one-fourth of an English penny, or one-half of an United States cent. He called His disciples and said unto them: "This poor widow hath cast more in than all they which have cast into the treasury: for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living." Measured by this standard, two things appear—that none are too poor to give; that the poor can give as much as the rich. This woman gave because she wanted to give; and Jesus approved her giving.

Churches mistake by hesitating to teach the poor to give. The Church had as well teach the poor not to pray. All should give; not as the woman gave, but "as God hath prospered them." One of the weak spots in the Church is her financial methods.

All ought to give, and to give systematically. The Bible way was to lay it by the first day of the week. Weekly contributions laid by, if not cast into the treasury till "meeting day," if that is only once a month, twice a month, or every Sunday. Poverty is no excuse, and riches is no excuse for not laying aside for the Church. Individual Church finance should be kept up regularly by the members. Were this done by all, Church expenses and regular benevolences would never get behind. It is the "put off" method on the part of members that forces a few to get together and "chip in" to pay the pastor or the Conference apportionment. The poor will get poorer if they fail to give the Lord His due. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." "The liberal soul shall be made fat; and he that watereth shall be watered also himself." It is a fundamental law in physics that action and reaction are equal; and it is no doubt true in giving to the Church, which is the same thing as giving to Jesus, for the Church is His body. No poor member should be ashamed to give his little, and no rich member should be afraid to give his much. Both should give as the Lord prospers them. Giving is more than money. It is thought, affection, service, energy, help, life. Here "the rich and poor meet together: the Lord is the Maker of them all." They cannot only sit together on equality, but they can give together in the same way. Poverty and riches are external and relative terms; within, in character they can be equal in the highest sense. "Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

The Church herself and her pastors are largely to blame for the great number of members who do not pay. They hate to say so much about money. They hate to urge the poor to give. They hate to insist on the rich to give so much. It should be kept in mind that you do not get men unless you get their money. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." As soon as men put their money into anything, they become interested in that thing. This is the logic of human experience. Let one ask himself this question: "Have I ever seen a really interested Church member who did not contribute to the support of the Church and her enterprises?" There is more than the house of worship and the congregation. It is the Church paper, the college, the orphanage, the missionaries, the whole organization with all its activities. A real interest in all these and contributions to them will develop noble Christian character and useful lives. It is said that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link; and measured by this standard, some Churches are very weak. It is the spirit of unity and co-operation that will make a strong Church in its entirety. The Church ought to set the standard of sound and successful business. It ought to be progressive. It ought to keep pace with the times in its activities. It ought to improve its buildings and furnishings; its music and benevolences; its preaching and its finances.

A PROMISING PLAN.

Last year, it will be remembered, the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference broke with the time-honored apportionment plan and adopted a suggested budget, which each Church was to adopt or reject. It speaks well for the Conference that only one Church, Lebanon, failed to endorse the budget suggested by the higher body, and no doubt Lebanon will fall in line this year.

At the session just closed, this Conference passed a most forward-looking resolution respecting the finances of the Sunday School. The resolution follows:

"We are thoroughly of the opinion that the Church should pay all the expenses of operating the Sunday School as a part of the current expense of the Church, and that all the offerings of our Sunday Schools should be given for benevolences. We would suggest one Sunday a month each for missions, for the Orphanage, for religious education and for our colleges, the fifth Sundays' offerings to be used for local benevolence and charity. There should be a definite effort in connection with these benevolent offerings to have the children at their Sunday School classes or departmental exercises give intelligently for these purposes, and the different boards of the Church should be asked to furnish information of an educational character to be used in connection with these offerings. We are of the opinion, further, that the children, either at the regular or junior Church, should be furnished envelopes in which they may make contributions to the support of the Church as such. We believe that this method of systematic giving through the Church budget will mean a new era of progress and prosperity and a new sense of stewardship for the years to come. We do not recommend this now for every Church, but we suggest and urge that our mission secretary select one or two Churches in which this plan may be tried out, and the results reported at the next session of Conference."

By this plan, the children will be taught from their earliest years to contribute regularly to the support of their Church through the envelope system, and to give their free-will offerings for the enterprises of the Church and community intelligently. We call upon the entire Church to give careful heed to this plan of financing the Church and its enterprises and of effectually educating in Christian stewardship at the same time. It is a most promising plan.

IMAGINATION AND THE BIBLE.

By Rev. Wm. J. May.

One of the reasons why so few people comparatively read the Bible is that they have never realized its human interest. Bible characters are not as real in mind and memory as characters in some other books. We read our Bibles or hear them read in surroundings that are a little removed from the close intimacy of every-day life. It is different from other books, and we do not come to it with the same imaginative insight which is the key to intimacy with people of whom we read.

To few people is Nehemiah as real a figure as, say, Ivanhoe, and the minor prophets are only curious names. It is not the fault of the Bible. The fault is in ourselves that we read it with unseeing eyes. We come to Scott or Dickens with imagination alert, eager to see, ready to enter into life as it is in the book, and live it. Too often we just come to the Bible as to an uninteresting textbook of morals lit up with a number of illustrative instances.

Old pictures and stained-glass windows have had much to do with it. There has seemed to be a special kind of art reserved for the representation of the men of the Bible that has made them seem unreal. They are always quite immaculately dressed and seldom represented without their appropriate symbols. St. Peter, for example, who, be it remembered, was a fisherman, is always represented as dressed in a Roman toga or in Greek drapery and usually carries two enormous keys. The Peter whom men knew on the Galilee lake, who loved his Lord and denied Him, and yet faced a great crowd on the day of Pentecost without shrinking or fear, was not a man who looked as if he had just stepped out of a wardrobe, but a man whose hands were rough from handling wet ropes and hard with rowing in contrary seas; a man whose clothes were stained from many wettings in the storm and probably mended where he had torn them at his work.

Matthew was not always seen with a written gospel, nor was David known by carrying a harp.

Holman Hunt did much to break down old tradition and bring in reality. Painters like William Hole, in the last generation, and Harold Copping, in this, have done more; but even yet we are slow of heart to believe and imagine.

When we read and consider the faith that made Moses refuse to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, how many people grasp the fact that Moses put behind him the splendor and the luxury of a court so wealthy that the glory of Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb only gives us a glimpse of it. How many of us have thought that it is quite probable that Joshua was one of the slaves who toiled at the building of the pyramids before he became Israel's military genius or realized that the wars of the Old Testament were quite as real and in many ways even more terrible than the great war of 1914-18.

How often do we remember that there is some one's life story behind every psalm in the Psalter, that each one was born of the travail of a soul in sorrow or was the thanksgiving of some soul for the light that shone in the darkness. They are human documents, stories of real life, but because they are in the Bible instead of a newspaper we seldom realize it.

Behind the prophesies of Jeremiah is the history of a man who suffered and stumbled and rose again, faltered and almost failed, yet endured to the end and was found faithful. Hosea, again, is a man whose love story was a tragedy almost too dark for words, and out of the heartbreak of his own betrayed love came to understand the tragedy of God's love for Israel.

The New Testament too is crowded with interesting people of whom you seldom have more than a glimpse—glimpses so tantalizing that they make you anxious to know more. Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea, for instance, were men of more importance in their day; men who, had there been newspapers in that time, would have had their speeches reported at some length; while St. Paul was one of the most brilliant men of his time, a young man with the world at his feet. When he became a Christian it must have seemed to his friends as mad a procedure as if, say Mr. Winston Churchill were to forsake his political and literary career to become an itinerating evangelist for the "peculiar people."

Real the miracles with a little imagination and see how much they gain. Picture the Gadarene demoniac as a man who so terrorized the countryside that no one dared venture near the caves where he had his dwelling; a man whom foolish mothers used as a bogey man to frighten their children. Quite probably he had a wife and children. Imagine what his healing meant to them. See him going up and down the district to which he had been so great a terror, trying to do people good because Jesus had done him good, and telling every one what great things Jesus had done for his soul.

Do you not think that the man whose withered arm was healed hurried home to really prove to himself that he could use it, play with his children, handle his tools, just feel again for very joy of feeling with the fingers that had been dead and senseless so many years? So the man whom Peter and John healed in the beautiful gate really did leap and dance and shout, and people were really shocked by it just as you would be shocked if some one made a similar scene in the porch of your Church on Sunday morning.

So with some of the other people in the gospels. What impelled that poor widow to drop her two mites into the treasury? Was she sorry afterwards? What did Zebedee think about it when John and James went after Jesus, and what did he say to them when some time afterwards they came home? Who was Simon of Cyrene, and what happened to him that first Good Friday so that he became known to the early Church as "the father of Alexander and Rufus"? And what was the kindness that made Paul call Simon of Cyrene's wife his "mother"?

There is no end to the human interest that lies within and behind the stories of the gospels and the early Church. The newer methods of Sunday School teaching, primary department work and the rest, have done much for us in this way. In seeking when we shall use the dramatic element in preaching and endeavor to make Bible stories live for little children has made them alive for older people as well.

Does it not seem obvious that this will be one line at least along which we shall revive interest not only in the Bible but in religion, one way of combating the too-often-made assertion that religion is remote from life?

We never outgrow our love of a story, and "truth embodied in a tale will enter in at lowly doors." I think the time is coming when we shall use the dramatic element in preaching and in biblical education far more freely than we have yet ventured to do. We shall follow the Master's method of telling people stories, telling them His stories, because they are incomparable and perfectly adapted to their purpose. But we shall elaborate them, as in all probability Jesus did. The gospels have preserved for us the bare outlines of the story. Ours is the task of filling in the outlines, and when we do that reverently and carefully we shall have done something worth while for our own day.

Take a story by way of illustration. In two or three sentences St. Luke gives us the story of the lost coin. It is a perfect little picture, but most of the people who worship with us on Sundays have brains too tired, bodies too weary, and nerves too overwrought to be able to fill in the details for themselves.

Tell how there had been a wedding down the street of the tentmakers, and Miriam had put on her bridal jewelry to go down with the others to watch the bride's home-coming. Picture her dismay when, as she takes off her headdress to put it in its hiding-place behind a loose stone in the wall, she sees that one coin is missing. She runs out into the streets and calls the others to ask them if they noticed it missing. Back into the house to light a lamp and sweep, for it is as serious a matter to her as for a Western woman to lose her wedding ring. The house is swept from wall to wall, the rush mats are shaken, the dust is turned over, and no trace of the coin. A second time she sweeps in vain; a third time, and despair deepens, and then the light glints on the coin lying on its edge in a crack in the earth floor. Now out into the streets again to call her friends and neighbors together: "Ruth, Mary, Elizabeth, rejoice with me! I have found my coin, the one which I had lost."

Now the seeking love of God stands out clearly when it is mirrored in a search as careful, as persistent, and as full of possible tragedy as that! For popular superstition said that a woman who loses a coin from her marriage chain had been as careless of her virtue as of her jewelry.

Time and opportunity for original research into Eastern life and customs may be denied most of us, but the books of those who have explored these subjects are cheap and plentiful, and most of the modern lives of Jesus are full of vivid, colorful, and imaginative touches which are gateways into the pleasant fields of interest.

One word of caution is perhaps necessary. Imagination must be kept in check. You must think and dream with your head in the air of dreamland,, but you must keep your feet upon the solid ground of actual fact. In the illustration above, there is little more than an imaginative elaboration of the two or three sentences in which Luke records the parable. The rest grows out of the obvious question, how did she lose it? Stories told in this way are never forgotten, and as often as the story comes back to memory, the lesson the story conveys comes back also by the sure working of the law of association. The Bible gains in interest. The Bible message gains in power.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

ALL OUR NEEDS SUPPLIED.

When James Gordon Bennet sent Henry M. Stanley to search for Livingstone, he said: "Draw on me for a thousand pounds today to provide your equipment, and when that is exhausted draw on me for another thousand, and when that is done, draw another thousand, and when that is done, draw another; but find Livingstone." God asks us to glorify Him by a life devoted to Him every day, and He authorizes us to draw on Him for the wisdom, grace and strength needed to enable us to reach His end; when one day's supply is exhausted, we are to draw another, and then another, and then another, until the complement of our days is filled up.—Selected.

Give freely. Try to catch the spirit of Christ, who pleased not Himself. Truly, it is more blessed to give than to receive. Say it this way, and you will realize the blessedness if you never have before: It is more blessed to give than to have to receive. Give, gladly and generously, considering those who have to receive.—Maltbie D. Babcock.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The relation of parents and children is a mutual relation. They act and react upon each other. One is incomplete without the other. This suggestion may violate common thought as to the relation of parents and children. It is generally understood that parents have the heavy end of the load to carry. They think of food and raiment, education and material provision. These outward gifts are only a small part of parental obligation. Instruction in morals and manners, and even in spiritual life, is as much parental obligation as any other provision. In addition to oral instruction, example is potential in influence over children. Young people are quick to discern life in its personal manifestations. Parental example outlives life itself, for by it, parents "being dead yet speak."

Parental obligations tax the whole being. Love is back of it all. But parental love is awakened by children, and they stimulate activity in all domestic relations. The very necessities of family life excite in parents latent energy and affection. It is the motive-power of home. All the parental instincts are born with the child. Baby brings into the home new thoughts, new plans, new aspirations, and new energies. The child contributes as much to the parent as the parent to the child. It is not only a numerical, but a social, a spiritual, and an intellectual addition to the family. The family is a larger term than the home; it includes the home. Children help to make home as well as parents. A family without a home is in poverty; and a home without a family is in poverty. Good children do as much for parents as parents do for children. They compel parents to think, to work, to behave, to live within bounds, to attend Church, to improve home, and to sacrifice; but it is the sacrifice of love. They attract friends, they create Sunday Schools, public schools, music, books, pictures, toys, and all these enter into the business activities of the world. Even the toy-world is a great business. It is not what men and children do so much as what they inspire others to do. Edison cannot do so much himself; but think of what his inventions have inspired others to do. The babe yet on its mother's lap has changed the whole house. It is the center of attention and service. Neighbors become more neighborly. Parents become more thoughtful. Older children become more quiet. The clothesline puts on new garments. The room gets new pieces of furniture. Father walks more lightly and speaks more gently. The child has made its contribution to father and mother. They are thinking of Christmas now. They plan for Easter later. They are occupied now with a soul. Its future becomes their charge. It has found its place in their hearts. Life has a new meaning. Responsibility is more keenly felt. The future looms large with hope.

ELON LETTER.

The first intercollegiate peace contest for women was held at Elon College on the evening of Armistice Day. Guilford, Meredith, and Elon were represented, and each speaker reflected high credit on her college.

Miss Frances McElroy represented Elon, and used as her subject, "War—The International Outlaw." The climax of her essay was reached when she suggested education as the method of outlawing war in these words:

"The militarists are not disturbed when we denounce war and declare it must be outlawed. There must be systematic propaganda against it, and this propaganda must be of an educational type. Ministers must preach against war. Religious newspapers must write against it. The various clubs must be enlisted to lend their sympathy for its outlawry. But the most effective method of extermination will be to study the whole question of international good will in Sunday School classes. Prohibition is a fact today because a generation ago the Sunday Schools began to have quarterly temperance lessons. In the history textbooks too, the evils of war must be taught and the blessings of peace. Voluntary Bible study classes in colleges and in communities must give themselves periodically to the study of peace and how to secure it. This is our hope of outlawing war."

At the chapel service of November 12th, faculty and students passed a resolution calling on the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference to petition the International Lesson Committee to include in the Sunday School lessons for the future the subject of international peace, at least two lessons a year. The Conference, on the 13th, approved the resolution of the faculty and students, and ordered the petition to be sent to Mr. Hermon Eldredge, our representative on the International Lesson Committee, with the urgent request that he take steps to have peace taught in the Sunday Schools of the future.

It will take a generation of such teaching to outlaw war, but it will be successfully outlawed in no other way. Education is the sure corrective of social ills. Whatever you wish a people to believe should be put in the curriculum. Teachers mold character, shape conduct, and fashion legislation. Religious teachers enjoy an especially high privilege in such matters. Jesus was primarily a Teacher, and He commissioned His disciples to go and "teach." The advocates of international peace as a phase of Christian brotherhood are wise to look hopefully to the educational method to achieve for them the goal of their spiritual aim and aspiration.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

To be successful in one's line of work, two things are needful—confidence and enthusiasm. That man who does not believe with all his might in the work he is trying to perform, who enters upon it in a half-hearted manner only, will never reach the top. He is doomed to be a failure from the start. Faith is necessary, that results may be obtained.

Enthusiasm for a cause has carried many a doubtful experiment to complete success. People like to do business with one who is full of pep and who shows he has confidence in the thing he is trying to do.

To attain a high altitude in the realm of success, you must soar there on the wings of enthusiasm. You can never get there wearing the wooden shoes of the lazy, the easily satisfied, and the mediocre.

The extent of your success depends upon the faithfulness with which you follow the course you have outlined for your life-work. It is easy to start at a new thing; the real test is whether you have the "backbone" to stick to it to a finish.

Once there was a man who said he would never do anything he had not done before. Fortunately, there were not many of him, so the world still continued to advance.

A man's backbone should be long enough to keep him from sitting down when he should be on his feet going to it, and it should be strong enough to keep him on his feet until he gets there.

When you get in a tight place and everything goes against you, till it seems you could not hold on a minute longer, never give up then, for that's just the place and time that the tide will turn.

Some people take a good deal of pride in the boast that they are "poor, but honest"; but if you labeled them "poor, but lazy," you would come nearer the truth.

You will find in the dictionary of the man who is a failure these words: "pessimist," "timid," "indolent," "dishonest," "lazybones," "gloomy," "quitter," "falsehood," "skeptical," "fearful"; but in the dictionary of the man who is a success you will find the reason for his success set forth in these words: "cheerfulness," "enthusiasm," "ambition," "courage," "work," "energy," "wisdom," "common sense," "system," "perseverance," "confidence," "honesty."

If with all your heart and might you seek the goal of success you will surely find it. When obstacles seem to block your way, fear not; have courage and remember there is no crown without a victory, and no victory without a battle.

You were shipped into this world with a good purpose. There is within you the power to do things. It is your duty—a duty you owe to yourself and your fellow-man—to develop this power. No one is born to fail. Nothing can make you fail unless you permit it. You can win, you will win, you must win if you earnestly watch and wait, and work while you wait.

Wadley, Ala. S. L. Beougher.

"GREATER LOVE . . .!"

Some deeds bring us right back to our faith in humanity! There are days when the dark and ugly things of life seem to bulk the biggest. We begin to wonder whether selfishness and greed and cruelty are not gaining the upper hand.

Then some act of pure heroism brings back our faith with a jerk. We are ashamed of our doubts, for it is true, as Emerson said: "One noble action wipes away the memory of thousands of selfish deeds."

We ought to take off our hats reverently to Frank Osborne, the youth of St. Austell, who gave his life for his brother. Although he could not swim, yet when he saw his elder brother struggling in a pit of water eighty feet deep he plunged in. Both were drowned.

This youth should have his name emblazoned on the roll of heroes. He saw the emergency, and because of his love for his brother, he plunged to almost certain death. It was not his own danger that weighed with him, but the danger of another. This is the highest love—the love that leaps to try to save without consulting self. Is it not truly written, "Greater love hath no man than this."

We cannot despair of humanity when such deeds as this are recorded. It shows us like a lightning flash that man has that spark of nobleness which can transcend danger and death. Scientists may wrangle and theorize, and talk of "personality," "ego," and "mysterious glands." There may be those who grow learned over convolutions of the brain, and seek to establish a connection between instincts and heredity. But

I say that a noble act of selfless heroism sweeps away these theories. It puts us on a solid proposition: man is capable of noble deeds, inspired by this "greater love" which is born in the soul, and is uncontrolled by reason.

Such an act puts heroism in its true place. Beside it, how the vaunted "glories" of other deeds "pale their ineffectual fires." Napoleon said: "All the world talks of my deeds. I make history." Yes, and in the making he destroyed thousands of lives, drenched the earth with blood, ruined many homes. History may miss the deed of Frank Osborne, the lowly youth of St. Austell, who died to try to save his brother. "The Hero of History" destroyed; the hero of St. Austell tried to save. Whose deeds shine the brightest?

Some deeds inspire. Others depress. To contemplate the heroism of the youth who could plunge into the deep waters of that pit lifts up the heart with a new appreciation of humanity and its possibilities.—Robert Power, in Birmingham Dispatch.

RESIGNATION REQUESTED.

Following an investigation of the theological beliefs of Dr. Henry Fox, professor of biology in Mercer University, Baptist, the board of trustees requested his resignation. The investigating committee held two meetings—first, in questioning Dr. Fox, and the second meeting concerned itself in requesting his resignation. The students passed resolutions condemnatory of the action of the trustees, and several members of the faculty intimated that they would also resign.

Dr. Fox has been teaching in Mercer since 1918, and has won many friends. He is a former president of the Association of Georgia Biologists, and is at present secretary of the Georgia Academy of Science. He is well known in his chosen field, and has written a number of papers on scientific subjects. He has been connected with government work. Many honorary degrees have been conferred upon him in recognition of the high order of his work as a biologist and teacher.

The reason given for the requested resignation was that his religious views were radically at variance with those of the Baptists of Georgia.

In replying to a questionnaire sent him by the committee, Dr. Fox made a frank statement of his religious beliefs. He defines God as a spirit of love and truth. He declares that, in so far as Christ was these incarnate, he was divine; he believed in the principles of Jesus as they reflect love and truth, and not unconditionally; he believed in the inspiration of Scripture as far as it shows that it was inspired by love and truth; he does not think that facts justify belief in the virgin birth, and is unwilling to accept simple Bible tradition for that event; he points out that discipleship consists in adhering to and practicing the principles of Jesus expressed in terms of love and truth. These are perhaps out of accord with the beliefs of the Baptists of Georgia, but one wonders if they are out of full accord at least with the Christian religion. S. M. LYNAM.

IN OTHER SHIPS.

One of the most striking signs of the times in the religious world is the changed attitude of the Church of England toward other Churches. Many who read this paper can remember when the Anglican Church occupied a position of superiority and exclusiveness. During recent years this has gradually been giving way to be superceded by the broader attitude of respect and recognition.

At the recent dedication of the great new cathedral at Liverpool, England, a remarkable service was held with free-churchmen, or "dissenters" as they are sometimes called, taking part. The bishop at Liverpool welcomed them heartily, and referred to the new building as "your cathedral and mine." His words are worth quoting:

"Brethren, I bid you welcome. You who sail in other ships, when forth we go to cast the net of everlasting love, welcome to our Cathedral Church of Christ, to the glory of whose resurrection this whole place has been consecrated. You make us glad by your fellowship with us in the rejoicings of this week. May He who has fulfilled His gracious promise to us in the beauty of this place, grant also unto us to see the fulfillment of His promise that we shall all grow into visible oneness in the fullness of Him in whom we are even now one spiritual temple not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Such a declaration is gratifying, indicating that a union of all the great Protestant forces is not as fanciful a project as it once seemed.—Christian Vanguard.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

SECOND FINANCIAL GOAL OF MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT.

The second financial goal of the movement was to collect within five years $375,000 for the Elon standardization fund, to which there was subscribed $381,000. People who could not subscribe $100 or more were not solicited. There has been collected on this fund $213,227.08, leaving a balance of $167,772.92 to be collected.

I was amazed that only 56 per cent had been collected. Elon must have a larger endowment, and the first thing to do is to pay these subscriptions. Some of us have made sacrifices upon these subscriptions and have obligated ourselves to the emergency fund. Is it fair that a few should bear the burden of endowing the college? The Church and the State are proud of Elon College. You know its value to the kingdom. She needs your help now. Will you come to her aid and pay your subscription to the standardization fund? The five years are up, but the obligation remains uncanceled.

Chairman of Mission Board.

Home and Foreign Field says that Mohammedanism is breaking down as a religious faith and becoming more and more a political system. This is certain to be the result where force is the method of propagating a religion. Even in our own land where Christianity is so strong, where we may feel its atmosphere and sweetness in most lives we touch, it can be noticed that those who cease to read the New Testament, who fail to seek the leadership of the Holy Spirit, and who distrust the power of the gospel, become politically-minded and often take to wire-pulling and intrigue to gain their ends.

QUADRENNIAL MEETING OF FEDERAL COUNCIL ANNOUNCED.

A preliminary announcement of the program of the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to be held at Atlanta, Ga., December 3d to 9th, has been made by the special committee on program, of which Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is chairman. The program indicates that the quadrennial meeting of the council will be discussing some of the most urgent and important issues before the Protestant Churches of America.

The general theme of the meeting as a whole is "The Church in the World." Among the specific subjects which are to be considered are: "The need of the world for the Church of Christ," "The evangelistic work of the Church," "The educational work of the Church," "The Church and the community," "The Church and race," "The Church and the nations," and "The co-operation of the Churches."

The evening meetings during the entire session will be devoted to a series of public meetings centering around the theme "The Common Tasks of the Churches." The several subjects to be considered in this series are: "Training the youth for Christ," "Winning men to Christ," "Christianizing our social relations," "Christianizing our race relations," "Christianizing our international relations," and "Winning the world to Christ."

Each Monday there will be a series of meetings of a devotional and inspirational character upon the theme, "The Call to Personal Religion," emphasizing the great convictions and experiences which Christians of all denominations share. Included in this series are: "Faith in God," "Loyalty to Christ," "Prayer," "Personal religion and public righteousness."

Among the speakers who are already announced are: Dr. Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions and president of the Federal Council; Governor William E. Sweet, of Colorado; Bishop William F. McDowell, of Washington; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, of Pittsburgh; Bishop Frederick F. Reese, of Georgia; Bishop Edwin D. Mouzon, of Nashville; Bishop Warren A. Candler, of Atlanta; Rev. Rockwell H. Potter, of Hartford, Conn., moderator of the National Council of Congregational Churches; Justice Florence E. Allen, of Columbus, Ohio; President E. Y. Mullins, of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky.; Rev. M. Ashby Jones, pastor of Ponce de Leon Baptist Church, Atlanta; President John Hope, of Morehouse College; Rev. James I. Vance, of the First Presbyterian Church of Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Henry H. Sweet, of Louisville, secretary of the Presbyterian board of education; Prof. William Adams Brown, of New York, and Bishop George C. Clement, of the A. M. E. Zion Church.

One of the most notable features of the gathering will be the presence of distinguished representatives of the Churches of foreign lands. These will include Rt. Hon. Sir Willoughby Dickinson of London, former member of the British Parliament and leader of the World Alliance for International Friendship through the Churches; Prof. Julius Richter, of the University of Berlin, a world authority on foreign missions; and Dr. Adolf Keller, of Zurich, Switzerland, one of the outstanding figures in European Protestantism. The National Christian Council of Japan will be represented by Rev. A. Reischauer, of Tokyo, the foreign missionary movement will be interpreted by Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, of Egypt and Arabia, the leading missionary to the Moslem world.

The several morning sessions will be devoted to a discussion of the policies and programs of the Churches in their co-operative work. These discussions will center chiefly around the report of the committee on policy for the next quadrennium, which includes one representative named by each of the twenty-eight constituent denominations.

The president of the council to succeed Dr. Speer and the other officers for the next quadrennium will be elected on Thursday morning, December 4th.

THE MEANING OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

When John Wesley said to a Christian who belonged to another denomination than his own: "If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand," he was voicing unconsciously the purpose and spirit of the Federal Council of the Churches. Organized by twenty-nine evangelical denominations as a means of expressing their underlying unity in Christ and of joining hand in hand in common tasks, its primary aim is to secure the largest possible measure of fellowship and co-operation among the evangelical Churches.

Each of the denominations comprising the council retains its full independence, but, through the council, joins with the others in regular conference and in co-operative service. So far from weakening or ignoring any denomination, this co-operation means the re-enforcing of each. Every part of the Church is stronger because of the strength of the Council as a whole.

The program and policies of the council are determined by the official representatives whom the various denominations appoint to serve upon the council. The council, therefore, is not a voluntary or independent organization, but the Churches themselves coming together in a more effective solidarity.

The council owes its existence to the fact that there is already a genuine spiritual unity among the Protestant Churches. Of this inner oneness, the council is simply the outward manifestation. The council grows in strength just in proportion to the growth of the spirit of mutual understanding and consciousness of common purposes among the Churches.

More specifically, the aims of the council, as defined in the constitution, which each constituent denomination has ratified, are as follows:

"To express the fellowship and catholic unity of the Christian Church.

"To bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world.

"To encourage devotional fellowship and mutual counsel concerning the spiritual life and religious activities of the Churches.

"To secure a larger combined influence for the Churches of Christ in all matters affecting the moral and social condition of the people, so as to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life."

In addition to serving as a national center for the co-operative work of the Churches, the council assists local communities to develop effective co-operation in dealing with their own community problems. As a result, there are now nearly fifty local federations or councils of Churches. Each of these is a body wholly independent of the Federal Council, being responsible only to the Churches of the local community, but receiving inspiration from the Federal Council and, through it, learning from the experience of other communities in co-operative Christian work.

The quadrennial meeting of the council, to be held in Atlanta, December 3d to 9th, will review the development of the co-operative movement in the Churches during the last four years, and outline its plan of work for the coming quadrennium. The program of the council, as the discussions at the Atlanta meeting will show, is grounded in an emphasis upon personal religion and the spirit of evangelism. This spirit, as the council conceives it, extends to all our social and international relations, and seeks to Christianize every phase of the world's life. What the Churches can do to get rid of war, to secure international justice and peace, to develop brotherhood in industry, to promote fraternity among the races of the world, to win the final victory over the liquor traffic—these and other vital questions will concern the Churches as represented in the council's assembly at Atlanta. To gain a clearer vision that Christ is the Lord of us all and to think together about practical plans for more fully making Him Lord in every realm is the outstanding purpose of this meeting.

THE CHURCH.

The Church is the noblest and the best organization in the world.

It furnishes the best examples of righteous living.

It produces the finest specimens of character of which this world has any knowledge.

It exercises the largest influence in the work of reform.

Whatever good is in the world has come through the avenues of the Church.

Both directly and indirectly it promotes and safeguards public morals.

It started all the stir that there has been in China.

It was the awakening power in India and Japan.

It conserves the peace and happiness of the community.

It promotes honest, progressive and beneficent government.

It does the most to make and maintain the love, brotherly kindness and good neighborhood.

It does the most to promote clean, brave, strong, self-sacrificing and efficient citizens and public servants.

It does the mostt o make and maintain the home as a place of virtue, love, righteousness, comfort and happiness.

It sympathizes with the weak, the wronged and oppressed, and pleads for social justice more than any other institution.

It stands most universally and uncompromisingly for the right and against the wrong.

It brings to all classes and conditions of people the best and most comforting and hope-inspiring messages regarding their sorrows, their sufferings, and what all must face—death.

The aim of the Church is to proclaim the gospel throughout the whole world.

Give the Church your best service. Christ loved the Church and gave Himself for it. Live by the Church, stand by the Church and die by the Church.—Exchange.

Chicago has a Church federation in which the Protestant Churches of that great city are united. It has just issued a strong call to the 800 Protestant Churches of the city, urging them to unite in earnest prayer for a revival of spiritual and vital godliness. It declares that this will come "by the Holy Spirit only," and it says that this revival "must be prayed down, and not worked up." The consideration of this important subject is not limited to Chicago. All over the Church the need for revival is being felt, and multitudes of Christian people are earnestly praying for the granting of this greatly needed blessing. When all of God's people shall unite in this great prayer, God will open the windows of heaven and pour out a blessing, till there be not room enough to receive it.—Presbyterian of the South.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson IX—November 30, 1924.

Subject: "The Good Samaritan."

Golden Text: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."—Luke 10:27.

Lesson: Luke 10:25-37.

Devotional Reading: 1 John 4:7-21.

Reference Material: Matt. 22:34-40; Mark 12:28-31.

"What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" The lawyer framed the question which arises in so many hearts. For there is a deep-seated—it might be called an instinctive—hunger for eternal life, and in many cases they are concerned with the way by which it can be made sure. One of the great reasons why religion has always had such an appeal to humanity has been its promises of a larger, better, and more enduring life than man has here in the flesh. And, although the lawyer perhaps did not know it, the man to whom he came with the question was the final authority on this more abundant life.

Jesus answered the question by asking a question. He asked the lawyer how he read in the law. And versed as he was in the law, the lawyer quickly gave the summary of the law, "Love God with all of one's being, and love one's neighbor as one's self." And Jesus had no hesitancy in saying that whoever did this should have that kind of life which would be eternal.

But desiring to "justify himself"—how human he was!—he asked: "And who is my neighbor?" And then Jesus answered his question, not with a question as in the former case, but with that matchless and immortal story of the good Samaritan. If the Master had not left us anything else except this story, He would have made His place sure as a great teacher. Never a man spake like this man, and in few cases did He speak as He spake in this case.

A certain man—the Master did not deal in vague generalities; He did not say humanity; He made the case concrete—had a most distressing experience. He was not only beaten and robbed: he was left half dead by the roadside. It happened "by chance"—many of life's greatest opportunities come at an unexpected turn in the road—that a priest and a Levite passed that way, and although the former saw him, the latter came to the place where he lay, neither of the men offering to help the unfortunate man. And the irony of it all was that they were the so-called religious leaders of the day. There is a fine touch of irony here.

But, fortunately for the man, and more fortunately for us, another man passed that way. And he stopped, and had compassion, and bound up his wounds, and brought him to an inn, and paid for him, and even provided for complete restoration. And he was a Samaritan! That was the straw that broke the camel's back. The hero of the story was a hated and ostracized Samaritan.

"Which of these three, thinkest thou, proved neighbor unto him that fell among the robbers?" said Jesus. And the lawyer was forced to admit that it was the Samaritan, although his pride did not permit him to name him by name. And Jesus suggested—no, he did more than suggest: He commanded—the lawyer to go and do likewise.

It is unnecessary to make any comment on this vivid story, but there are a number of interesting and suggestive teaching points. They are as follows:

Teaching Points.

1. When a man wants to know anything about life, he can do no better than to go to Him who is the Life.

2. He who really wills to know the will of God will soon learn what it is.

3. If we do not love our fellowman whom we have seen, there is not much chance of us loving God, whom we have not seen.

4. Love to God is the only basis for abiding love to man.

5. Neighbors are not to be interpreted in a geographical sense.

6. The supplication of the spirit of service for Christ is to be made in concrete terms.

7. Professional religious men may not be really religious.

8. Compassion is a prerequisite for helpful service.

9. The misfortunes of others constitute a challenge to us.

10. Kindness speaks in a universal language.

11. The personal touch counts for most in service.

12. Real charity goes beyond the act itself.

13. It is not enough to be a hearer of the Word; one must be a doer.

14. It is not what we do, or how much we do, but the spirit in which we do it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

November 30, 1924.

Topic: "Stewardship—Prayer."

Scripture Lesson: "Far be it from me that I should sin against Jehovah in ceasing to pray for you."—Matt. 6:9-13.

Daily Readings: M., Nov. 24—Mark 7:24-30, Prayer for children. T., Nov. 25—Gen. 18:23-33, Prayer for a city. W., Nov. 26—Deut. 9:7-20, Prayer for a nation. T., Nov. 27—1 Tim. 2:1-4, Prayer for a world. F., Nov. 28—Ex. 15:22-27, A prayer answered. S., Nov. 29—Deut. 3:21-20, A prayer denied. S., Nov. 30—Matt. 6:9-13, Our prayers for Christ's world.

Prayer is an act of worship and one cannot fully enjoy worship without periods of prayer. Since worship is that part that covers all the attitudes of the soul in its approach to the Divine we, as lower creatures, must strive with all earnestness to enjoy this vital part of our fellowship. Prayer also offers opportunity for adoration, confession and thanksgiving which enable the suppliant to become a worshiper. Prayer offers an opportunity for the individual reflect of various stages of experience which have been vital factors in personal religious development. Prayer helps the individual to realize a sense of need and a belief that God is able to reward them that diligently seek Him. Further, prayer helps us to realize the needs of our brother-man. While in the attitude of prayer, man cannot really be fair to himself and God without also seeing the needs of others. Therefore, a life cannot be complete in its contribution to the world without the prayer life.

Questions for the Meeting.

What is prayer?

What place has thanksgiving in prayer?

What personal benefits are reaped as a result of prayer?

How does prayer help to cultivate faith?

How and when should we pray?

What is the difference in real prayers and simply "saying prayers"?

For Discussion.—Reasons for praying silent prayers. Reasons for praying audible.

BIBLE SUNDAY.

Bible Sunday, for many years sponsored by the American Bible Society and observed as an opportunity to emphasize the place of the Bible in the life of the world and the program of the Church, has become an annual event in Protestant Churches throughout the United States and in many mission fields.

The date fixed for its observance is the third Sunday before Christmas, which this year falls on December 7th. This date is not arbitrary, however. Many Churches find it more convenient to observe another Sunday in the month, and still others prefer another month, either in the early fall or late winter.

The work of the Bible Society, organized in 1806 as an agency for "the wider circulation of the Holy Scriptures without note or comment," is recognized as indispensable to the Church. A Bible Sunday program, planned along the lines suggested by the American Bible Society, cannot fail to arouse interest in the work of translation, publication and circulation of the Bible in many languages and in all parts of the world.

The theme selected for this year is "Every Man in His Own Tongue," and a sixteen-page pamphlet 12x9 inches in size has been prepared which is full of interesting and instructive information concerning the romance of Bible translation from the earliest days down to the present time, with a list of the 770 languages and dialects into which translations have been made. The whole Bible has been translated into 158 of these languages; the New Testament into 142; portions (at least one complete book) in 422; parts (only chapters or verses) into 48.

This information has been assembled in such form as to be of the greatest assistance to pastors, Sunday School superintendents and others in the preparation of sermons and addresses on the subject of Bible translation. The titles of the chapters are significant of the phases of the subject discussed: "Some difficulties met by the translators," "Principles governing translations," "Concerning some translations," "The early translations into English," "The Authorized and Revised Versions of the English Bible," "Translations for missionary purposes," "The ancient manuscripts," "The earliest translations."

John 3:16, in twenty-three languages, with pen-and-ink sketches of scenes in the countries where these languages are spoken, makes an attractive booklet for distribution in the pews. For display on bulletin-boards, in Church vestibules, etc., there is a poster, 25x36 inches in size, showing the list of 770 languages and dialects referred to above.

All of this material may be secured free of charge in such quantities as are desired by addressing the American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York City.

THINGS ARE NOT ALWAYS WHAT THEY SEEM TO BE.

Little Eddie was playing at the window, when all at once he looked, very much puzzled, and, turning to his mother who sat beside him, said:

"Oh, Mamma! I did not know that there was a hollow in our backyard."

"Are you quite sure that there is one there, Eddie?" asked his mother; "I think you must have made a mistake."

"Yes, there is one there," said Eddie, "and a big, crooked tree, too. I can see them just as plain as can be. Come and see for yourself, Mamma."

His mother went to the window and looked out, and sure enough there were the hollow and the crooked tree. Eddie greatly wondered why he had never seen these before. His mother told him to look through another pane and see how things appeared. He did so, but could see no hollow or crooked tree either. The yard was leved, and the trees all straight.

His mother explained matters to him just the best she could. She told him that there were wrinkles and flaws in the pane he looked through at first, and these made the objects in the yard look crooked. She said:

"There are some little boys and girls who have crooked eyes. I don't mean that they are cross-eyed, but that they are cross and hateful, and this makes them think that everybody else is out of sorts. At other times, they are pleasant and happy, and then they think that everybody is pleasant and happy, too. Now, Eddie, if you want everybody to appear ugly, be hateful and cross yourself. If you want others to appear to look through smiling eyes, look through smiling eyes yourself. And if you want others to be kind to you, you must be kind to them. Do to others as you would have others do to you."

THE BRAVE BOY.

Albert, Frank and Ned had planned to go to a football match, when, the night before, Albert remembered he had promised little Daisy to take her on the river, rowing, on her birthday, and he would not disappoint her for anything. When the boys came for him in the morning, he told them he could not go, as he had something else to do. They went out of the house angry, slamming the door after them.

Daisy was a nice little girl, living with her mother, who was a widow, and a warm friendship sprang up between Albert and her.

She waited until she was tired, and finally thought she would get into the boat. Albert started, and on the way met a little old woman, and just behind her came tearing along, foaming and yelping, a maddog, while a rabble followed armed with pitchforks and sticks. The old woman tried to run, but stumbled and fell, and the dog was upon her. Albert struck again and hit him in the right place, and he lay quivering on the ground. Albert felt a faintness creep over him, and they carried him into a neighboring cottage. where a doctor came and burnt out the wound. He never flinched, and his leg was bound up and he was carried home in a carriage.

On its way, the ball players rushed up, inquiring what the row was. When they found it was Albert and heard the particulars, they said to him, "You're a regular brick!"

Albert asked them to go after Daisy and take her home. They found her in the boat, where she had waited patiently many an hour, and took her home in a chair made by their arms laced together, as you may have ridden sometimes; and Daisy said that boys were about as good as horses, they carried her so nicely.

AUTUMN.

By L. M. Thornton.

The roses have faded, the lilies have gone,
And the wheat fields lie gold in the light of the dawn;
The plovers are singing, the pheasants are grown,
And every spring thrush has a brood of her own.
If eastward I wander or westward I go,
The daisy is sifting her petals of snow,
And poppy and aster aflame in the sun
Are telling the story that summer is done.

The breezes blow sweet with the incense of ferns,
And afar in the distance a forest fire burns,
Half veiling the sky in a mantle of haze
And adding a charm to these mystical days.
Through meadows where gleaners could still find a store,
Through woodlands where nut trees are burdened once more,
Past ripening orchards of apple and plum,
There ripples a message that autumn has come.

The milkweed pods open, the cat-tails are brown,
The sunflower is lifting a worshipful crown,
And bees heavy burdened are taking their flight
From fields where the buckwheat is fragrant and white.
Wherever I look there is plenty and peace,
The earth heaps her largess of yearly increase,
Then rests from her labors triumphant at last
When Autumn is with us and Summer is past.

KEEPSAKES.

By James A. Doyle.

Only a pair of tiny shoes
And a battered rubber toy;
Not much, you say, to hide away,
And moisten with tears at the close of day;
Yet once they belonged to my little boy.
This worn-out plaything a treasure sweet—
Answered the call of his baby heart,
And in these shoes, the toddling feet
(Now stronger grown and sure, and fleet)
Into life's wonderland made a start.

Surely the years have hurried by,
And, in passing, left me lone.
Revered I hold these keepsakes old,
They whisper to me, when the way grows cold,
Of sunshine warm in the days now flown.
And when the shadows at nightfall creep
Over the roofs of the quiet town,
Out of the gray dust memories leap,
Arousing thought from its daytime sleep,
Then with a rush the tears come down.

THE BOY WE LIKE.

The boy who never makes fun of old age.

The boy who does not cheat in work or play.

The boy who never calls anybody bad names, no matter what anybody calls him.

The boy who is never cruel to animals.

The boy who never lies. Even white lies leave black spots on the character.

The boy who never makes fun of a companion for something he could not help.

The boy who says "No" when asked to do a wrong thing.

The boy who is always courteous to women and girls.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our Thanksgiving offering is starting off nicely. We have $294.25 to report this week sent in by friends who are interested in our work. Mr. B. N. Duke, of New York City, sent us a check for $250.00 for a Thanksgiving offering. Mr. Duke is not a member of our Church, but he has been real good to us for several years, and we are very grateful. If other people are interested in us, our own people certainly ought to be interested. We ought to have five hundred members in our denomination who could send us a check for $5.00. We ought to have two hundred who could send us check for $10.00. We should have one hundred who could send us check for $20.00. We ought to have as many as fifty who could send us check for $50.00, and as many as twenty-five who could send us check for $100—which class will you join?

I want to appeal to the pastors and Sunday sSchool superintendents to see that a Thanksgiving envelope gets into the hand of each member of your Church. Let us all join in and work together to raise the largest Thanksgiving offering the Church has ever raised. If you will raise the $10,000, I will have my picture made, to show you what a broad smile it put on my face. I might have it printed in THE SUN, so you could enjoy the radiance of the smile.

THE BENEFITS AND BLESSINGS OF THE TITHE.

BY MRS. THOS. J. ARNOLD.

For over fifty years, I have been a tither. My father taught me in my early childhood both by precept and example. I began it when a very young school-girl, when I received my first small allowance, so I feel that I can speak not only from experience, but with authority.

Let us look first at the benefits. The first of these and the greatest is our silent partner. When we take our Heavenly Father into our business, He gives us more wisdom to handle our affairs and His guidance to prevent our making mistakes such as bad investments, or being defrauded by the unscrupulous. And He also puts into our hearts where it is best and wisest to spend His share, our tithes. If we have an earthly partner we divide with him the half or the third of our income, according to the stock he has put in. So when our silent partner gives us all we have and then tells us what He expects of us when He says, "Bring ye all the tithes into my storehouse," shouldn't we be as faithful with Him as with our earthly partner?

The second benefit: Tithing serves as the balance wheel to stabilize our character and give us the right perspective about giving. Haven't you noticed among all your friends and acquaintances how few strike the happy medium in giving? They are either too extravagant or too economical. So to the extravagant one, when he begins to tithe it teaches him lessons of thrift and economy, to save for this high purpose. And to the economical one it warms up the cockles of his heart and takes away the love of money, which is the root of all evil, and makes of him the "cheerful giver whom God loves."

The third benefit: It increases our material prosperity so that we have more for the Master's service. When God says, "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord, and that which he hath given will He pay him again." He pays it and with interest, when He says: "Bring ye in all the tithes and prove me, so that I will pour you out a blessing." He pours it out until there is not room enough to receive it. When Jesus says, "Give and it shall be given unto you," He gives it, "with good measure, pressed down and running over." So let us be faithful in the least things, and when our character is ready for it He will give us the greater, if used for His honor and glory.

The fourth benefit: If we let the tithe teach us that we owe to God another great gift, that He requires just as emphatically, or even more so; that is, that the seventh of our time, as well as the tenth of our possessions belong to God. When He commands, "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy," it is entirely for our benefit to make us holy. Why should we deny ourselves the needed Sabbath rest, so necessary for our physical well-being and the praise and worship so necessary for our spiritual progress? We owe it to our children and the weaker Christians to be firm and obedient to the Lord in the observance of His holy day. See how these two duties, charity and Sabbath observance, are associated, with their consequent rewards, in Isaiah 58:10-14.

When it comes to the blessings, there are so many it is hard to enumerate them, so I will give only the outstanding ones. First, it is handed down. Can a mother have any greater joy than to see her children carrying out her ideas and ideals? So God has blessed me in making my children Christian tithers, and I will leave to them my parting admonition that they teach it to their children so that my father's and grandfather's ideals for me may be carried out to countless generations.

The second great blessing is in the "greater works." When Jesus said to His disciples that they were to do even greater works than He, we naturally think He meant the great preachers, like Paul and Whitfield and Moody. But when sanctified givers like our Mr. Watts and our Mr. Graham consecrate their money by building great educational halls for the Christian training of our youth from one generation to another, and build colleges and hospitals in heathen lands and send the light so that thousands are redeemed through their munificence, I believe Jesus will call that "the greater works" also. I love to think that He is preparing a mansion for such givers to occupy with their spiritual children and let us smaller givers remember that exactly the same commendation is given to the two-talent man as to the five-talent man, and He can magnify our small gifts into "greater works."

The third great blessing is the "treasure in heaven," kept from the moth and rust and waiting for us. Jesus commanded us to lay up this treasure for ourselves, not for Himself. It's like having a little bank account up there and He is keeping the account (Phil. 4:17). And probably we are sending on the material to prepare our place, "for it is written," "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Dear Christian friends, don't rob yourselves of this blessing.

The fourth blessing is the spiritual growth. I believe that if we are obedient to God in this one requirement, "He will continue the good work He has begun in us" (Phil. 1:6), "and will perform it until the day of Christ." So He will help us to grow in grace, will increase our faith and answer our prayers. Take, for instance, that intimate and almost audacious prayer of Nehemiah, where he tells God he governed the people without charge, how many he fed at his table, how many oxen and sheep and fowls he killed daily for their maintenance, and then asks, "Think upon me for good according to all that I have done for this people." Three times he makes a similar prayer. "Remember me, O my God, for good, and wipe not out my good deeds that I have done for the house of my God." Nehemiah was so close to his God he could pray in that familiar way and it was acceptable. Our Bible teaches us that every sincere gift from that of "Righteous Able" to the widow's mite and cup of cold water is noticed and appreciated.

The joy is the last blessing that I will mention. Some one has aptly described "Happiness as a perfume which we cannot shed over others without spilling a few drops on ourselves." So I want to assure you that tithing is a happiness where we spill the great big drops on ourselves. My prayer goes with this little article that every Christian nontither who reads it may be won to partake of this joy.

May God grant that not one of us fail to give ourselves along with our gifts and be prepared for our final summons, "Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."—Presbyterian of the South.

MONDAY.

CULTIVATE THE ART OF SAYING "NO" GRACEFULLY AND TACTFULLY.

Do you listen like a "wooden Indian" to a personal invitation and then, no matter how good your excuse for not accepting, do you say: "Thank you, I cannot accept," and drop the matter right there? Have you any idea how rude you are? Have you any idea how discourteous you sound when you refuse so curtly, probably with a half-smile playing over your features as you listen to the invitation, knowing perfectly well that in the end you are going to say, "No."

Do you wonder why you are not as popular as you wish to be with your friends? It is because you do not know how to smooth down your regrets. You cannot refuse gracefully. It is one of the finest of the fine arts—to be able to decline tactfully.

A certain young man once said to a girl: "I would rather have a marriage proposal declined by 'Miss So-and-So' than to be accepted by any other girl I know."

Why? Because the young woman could say "No" firmly, but so pleasantly that it did not leave a sting. Why do you not cultivate the art of declining truthfully and gracefully. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

TUESDAY.

DEEPENING THE CHANNELS.

"And sounded, and found it twenty fathoms, and when they had gone a little farther, they sounded again and found it fifteen fathoms."—Acts 27:21-29.

The sailor is wise in taking repeated soundings to determine the depth of the channel. Without this precaution, his ship might oftener go aground or on the rocks. It is at least imperative that a man should take moral soundings to see whether his soul's ship is in safe channels.

Those who live near the Great Lakes or the ocean are familiar with dredges and sandsuckers, and know that the government spends millions annually to keep our harbors and river channels open. We do not stop to consider the value of the moral dredges, our Churches, which make life's highways safe for souls.

Now, the carrying capacity of a life depends upon the depth of its channel. Shallow waters carry light loads. In some lives, the rocks prevent free passage.

And when sin gets into the life, and the waters are running wild out of channel, then there is added work to be done. The channels are continually being filled up. Strong currents bring in the sand and debris. Opening the channels once is not sufficient; it must be done again and again. You began your Christian life gloriously. How have you kept on? Neglect of the channel lessens its capacity, if it does not ruin it. The constant task of life is to deepen the channels.

You know the causes of clogged channels and the results. Apply the homely figure to your own life. Clear out the debris which hinders the current. Blast it, if necessary, as they did the rocks at Hell Gate in East River! Patrol the channel, once you have opened it, and thus keep it open. —Ernest Bourner Allen.

WEDNESDAY.

IN THE MIDST OF STORM.

"And there arose a great storm of wind, and the waves beat into the ship, so that it was now full."—Mark 4:37.

There had been storms before the one recorded in the text on the Sea of Galilee, and many have occurred since. Not only the ship in which the Master and the disciples were sailing was in peril, but there were also other little ships, and they too must have suffered from the storm. And, when Jesus spoke the word that brought the calm to the ship in which were the disciples, the other ships must have shared the blessing that came from the command of Jesus—"Peace, be still."

Why do we have the interesting account of this storm at sea? Evidently that our faith may be increased in Jesus, and that we may make proper applications to our lives. Jesus invited the disciples to make that journey, and, being divine, He must have known the storm was coming. He invites us to follow Him, and on the journey there may be waiting a storm. We do not escape the storms of life because we accept Jesus, but having Him, we have power to safely pass through them. The difference in a life that has Jesus in it and one that does not is illustrated by the safety of the one and the danger of the other. In the first, the power within is greater than the power without; in the second, the power without is greater than that within, and hence the danger and loss.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Jesus, and that we can have Him as a royal guest in our lives to still every storm and insure our safety. Amen.—T. E. White.

THURSDAY.

THE BIRDS.

"The time of the singing of birds is come."—Sol. 2:11-12.

The spiritual mind delights to trace God's ways in nature. Jesus did this and His story of the sparrows is beautiful. To Jesus, nature was a mirror of the Father. He saw God in the fields and trees, the seeds, and the soil, the flowers and the birds.

Who can live amid all the witchery and exuberance of this lovely season and not see God's manifestation in it? The birds are God's feathered folk, symbols of the angels to man. Jesus lived much with the birds. Into the worry and fretfulness of our life, how much we need to learn this lesson: to give ourselves up to the divine purpose and be gathered as a hen gathereth her chickens.

In a forest fire somewhere in the North, the fire caught the nest of a bird. The young were there, and the mother bird stayed on the nest through it all. In the morning she was dead, but underneath the burned wing the little ones were safe. Is not this a reminder of the divine love which gave its life for us?

God will always have a choir—the first music of the world came from a bird. The birds come and go, migratory and yet guided by the unseen Father. Without map or chart, they take their way through the azure sky to the land of sunshine and renewment. Man, too, is a pilgrim. He moves on, the whisper of God in his heart, the tug and call of a better land. As Bryant said:

"He who from zone to zone
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone,
Will lead my steps aright."

—Rev. A. E. Gregory.

Prayer.—That with each recurrent season we may be reminded of God's mercies, and learn from His care of all created things; and let us be mindful to share our blessings with others.

FRIDAY.

OUR DUTY TO CHILDHOOD.

"Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father."—Matt. 18:10-14.

Dr. John H. Finley, distinguished educator and publicist, has published a little book under the title, "The Debt Eternal." It is a plea for the literal and spiritual acceptance by the Church of the charge which Jesus Christ laid upon it when He said, "Despise not one of these little ones." It is a forceful reminder of the obligation of men and women to the children of their generation in the interest of a fair future for the sons of men. Neglected childhood means ultimate social ruin. Children have a right to be well born. They have a right to education. They have a right to childhood, which is to say they have a right to play.

The inventions and discoveries of the future, the reforms of tomorrow in Church and State, the hope of a world redeemed from cruelty and crime, all slumber in the brain of the child of today—the child in his cradle, the child in the kindergarten, the child in the Bible school, the child in the home.

At the funeral of a child, some one quoted the saying of a philosopher, "The death of a beautiful child is a public calamity; the earth, for the moment, is less fair." Far more tragic, far more disastrous, is the life of a child whose parents and teachers are unaware of the possibility locked up within that little breast. For their welfare, material and moral, the Lord Christ holds us responsible. As they are sacred in His sight, so must they be in ours.—Rev. C. C. Albertson.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

SALVATION POSSIBLE TO ALL.

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts."—Isaac 55:7.

"Repent ye, therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out."—Acts 3:19.

Salvation is obtained through true repentance, forsaking wrong ways and unrighteous thoughts and following the Lord.

A person who will do this is a new person (2 Cor. 5:17).

So that salvation is godliness, not genius; and the most godless wretch may thus possess it. Wherever there is love, there is a genius for godliness.

But that soul must come nakedly, penitently, humbly, unselfishly, and with full surrender and consecration. Until he does—then, and not until then—does he pass into the society of God.

Prayer.—Our Father, may we come to Thee wholly and live that way every day. Enable us to carry with us this day a wholesome sense of the worth of the love in Thy sight and live the life for Thee and our fellow-men. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

HIS SPIRIT ON HIS DAY.

"I was on the Spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

Through the week we go down the valleys of care and burdens, and through a thousand vexing problems. On Sundays we should ascend the hills of light, joy in God's presence, and the glories of that which is highest and holiest and divinely suited to our natures. The Spirit of the Lord this day counteracts the shadows of the week and strengthens us for those to come the next week, giving us the victory over our souls. In this way, the Sabbaths are like mountain-peaks in our experience, and as the days and weeks roll by, we go on from mountain-top to mountain-top, till at last we shall catch the glory of it all in the hope we shall see before us, to be with Him forever. That glory will loom up before us as the gate of eternal glory through which we may enter in, and go no more out forever—forever with the Lord.

Prayer.—Our Father, humble our hearts before Thee this day, and open our hearts to Thy Spirit. Make us supremely conscious of the double blessing we have in coming to Thee; release us from the pressure of outward business, and enable us to escape from the tyranny of our own strength. Dear Lord, so keep us to come to Thee, that we may get away from the engrossing business of living, and be filled with the earnestness, joy and fullness of the renewed life. In His name we ask it. Amen.

CHILDHOOD'S SHINING ARMOR—HEALTH.

By Helena Lorenz Williams.

No one has ever discovered why small boys detest having their ears scrubbed or hate to wash their hands before they come to table; or why, for that matter, they never voluntarily clean their fingernails. One might think that these are only trials that descend upon mothers to try their love as well as their tempers, except that science has now found a way to lighten the burden of making children hygienic just as efficiently as she invented the vacuum cleaner and the washing-machine.

Several years ago a man named Charles M. DeForest, whose young son was as averse to performing his personal ablutions as anybody else's son, hit upon the idea of combining the pursuit of cleanliness with adventure and romance. He simply converted each "chore," as he called the boy's daily health tasks, into so many sword thrusts against the great dragon, disease. The plan worked; so well, in fact, that the National Tuberculosis Association organized a nation-wide modern health crusade movement as one of its educational departments. Since then, more than eight million boys and girls have been enrolled as warriors in the fight for perfect health. Briefly, the idea is this: each child receives a score-card against which he daily checks the chores he has performed. These consist of the following:

1. I washed my hands before each meal today.
2. I brushed my teeth thoroughly.
3. I tried hard to keep fingers and pencils out of my mouth and nose.
4. I carried a clean handkerchief.
5. I drank three glasses of water, but no tea nor coffee.
6. I tried to eat only wholesome food, including vegetables and fruit.
7. I drank slowly two glasses of milk.
8. I went to toilet at regular time.
9. I played outdoors or with windows open a half-hour.
10. I was in bed eleven or more hours last night, windows open.
11. I had a complete bath on each day of the week that is checked (x).

This great child-health movement is such a success that a number of States have incorporated the modern health crusade system in the school curricula as an adjunct to the study of hygiene. As the children progress in the work, they receive the titles of knight, knight banneret, knight banneret constant, and knight of the round-table. Bright gold and enamel insignia proclaim their ranks.

The education of the children in correct habits of health is one of the greatest factors in the control of tuberculosis. The National Tuberculosis Association and its affiliated organizations, therefore, concentrate a large part of their activities on this phase of the campaign. In order to continue the work, the seventeenth annual Christmas seal sale will be held throughout the country in December.

Put yourself on your Christmas list

YOU can give to yourself at Christmas time, and yet be as unselfish and as charitable as you like to be. Buy Christmas Seals.

Everywhere there are men and women whose only hope for life and health is in the Tuberculosis Associations. Christmas Seals furnish the funds to bring these men and women sufferers from tuberculosis back to health. When you buy Christmas Seals, it is you who are giving them the greatest gift that lies within the reach of man—the gift of life.

Every life you save from tuberculosis means additional protection for you and your family. Funds from the sale of Christmas Seals have eliminated half the deaths from tuberculosis. Help stamp out the dread disease. Buy Christmas Seals.

The Labor government, under Ramsay MacDonald, has been overthrown. The overthrow occurred on October 8th, when Parliament did not support him in his treaty with Russia. The Premier appealed to the people, who failed to sustain him. The Conservatives won an overwhelming victory, and King George called upon former Premier Stanley Baldwin to form a new Cabinet. Mr. MacDonald retained his seat in Parliament, but Labor lost heavily in the elections, while the Liberal party practically went out of existence.

THE MARCH OF MODERNITY.

Truly, the old order of things is changing in Europe. It is not alone princes and principalities that are being scrapped, but cherished institutions of quite a different description. Now it is Venetian gondolas and the famed hospice of the Great St. Bernard.

"A traveler, by the faithful hound, half-buried in the snow was found," says the poet. The "faithful hound" still remains, but things are undergoing a drastic change for the traveler. The famous hospice in the Alps is to be turned into a modern hotel.

The increased use of the automobile and the consequent greater volume of travelers has proved too much for the good monks, and the voluntary contribution box was too often overlooked or niggardly recognized by those who had partaken of the monks' hospitality. So that alongside the hospice will be erected a modern lodging where guests will register and pay their shot as in any other hotel.

The same wave of modernity has overtaken that other happy hunting-ground of tourists, Venice the peerless, and the gondola is doomed. An edict has been issued that all steamboats and all gondolas in Venice must be equipped with electric engines.

Let Ruskin not arise from his grave and smite Mussolini Caesar! No more will the gondolier warble weird melodies to the rhythmic beat of his oar, no more will the picturesque craft glide along the placid bosom of the sparkling lagoon. Electric launches on the Grand Canal! Automobiles and hotel clerks on the highest altitudes of the Alps! And more than that—a scenic railway projected for Mt. Sinai! The world is moving.—Dearborn Independent.

WHEN GOD SEES THE CROSS.

Men can see Christ on the cross—and forget Him. God can never forget the sight He once saw—of His only begotten Son on the cross. It means more to God than it can mean even to those saved sinners here on earth who know and love the Lord best. Isaac Watts' great hymn, which God has blessed to uncounted multitudes of Christians, "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross," gives one side of the truth; but there is another side, even better, which has been brought out in a hymn by Anna Ross. She introduces it with Andrew Murray's words: "In prayer let us expect an answer like the value of the blood of Christ in His Father's sight." This new hymn, with its infinitely precious truths, is as follows:

"When God surveys the wondrous cross
On which His own Beloved died,
His richest stores of heavenly grace
To sinners all are opened wide.

"Forbid it, Lord, that I should boast,
Save in the death of Christ my God;
The inheritance of peace and power
Are mine own portion through His blood.

"See from His head, His hands, His feet,
Sorrow and love flow mingled down;
God freely gave His Son to death—
What will He do that death to crown?

"The whole wide universe is His,
But that were riches far too small;
In answer to the death of Christ
God gives Himself, His love, His all."

British Government Orders Derigible.—

The British Government has gone the United States one better. A contract has recently been placed with the Vickers Company for a derigible with a gas capacity of 5,000,000 cubic feet. This is about twice the size of the derigible recently acquired by our own country from the German Government.

Must Support Parents.—

The Supreme Court of the State of Indiana has upheld a law requiring a man to support his mother and father if they are poor and he is able to take care of them. The man in question had allowed his parents to go to the poor house, offering as an excuse the fact that he could not provide for them and at the same time make the payments on his automobile, which had been bought on the installment plan. The installments will now have to wait.

Mrs. Harding Is Dead.—

Florence Kling Harding, the wife of our late President, died at White Oaks Sanitarium, on November 21st. Mrs. Harding had been in poor health for several years, having nearly succumbed to the kidney ailment which was the cause of her death, while she was mistress of the White House. Although she took President Harding's death in a most heroic manner, she had never recovered from the shock, and shortly after the death of Dr. Chas. E. Sawyer, who had been their family physician for more than twenty years, she suffered a relapse which culminated in her death.

House of Youth.—

The Protestant Episcopal Church already has its house of bishops, and its house of delegates, and Bishop Charles P. Anderson, of the Diocese of Chicago, would create a house of youth. He told the association of young people in his diocese that it was not true that they were members of the Church of the future, but that they were members of the Church of the present. He declared that the English Church was far ahead of the Church in America, because England had long had the house of youth. He thinks that youth can contribute much that is sorely needed by the Churches. He wishes the young people of his diocese to express themselves on the vital questions.

Churches are coming to realize that youth does have thoughts and ideas, and that those thoughts and ideas are worth attending to. Youth too, is beginning to think more seriously, as the young people are realizing that they have parts which must be played in life.

Thanksgiving Proclamation

WE APPROACH that season of the year when it has been the custom for the American people to give thanks for the good fortune which the bounty of Providence, through the generosity of nature, has visited upon them. It is altogether a good custom. It has the sanction of antiquity and the approbation of our religious convictions.

In acknowledging the receipt of divine favors, in contemplating the blessings which have been bestowed upon us, we shall reveal the spiritual strength of the nation.

The year has been marked by a continuation of peace whereby our country has entered into relationship of better understanding with all the other nations of the earth. Ways have been revealed to us by which we could perform very great service through the giving of friendly counsel, through the extension of financial assistance, and through the exercise of a spirit of neighborly kindliness to less-favored peoples. We should give thanks for the power which has been given into our keeping, with which we have been able to render these services to the rest of mankind.

At home we have continually had an improving state of the public health. The production of our industries has been large, and our harvests have been bountiful. We have been remarkably free from disorder and remarkably successful in all those pursuits which flourish during a state of domestic peace. An abundant prosperity has overspread the land.

We shall do well to accept all these favors and bounties with a becoming humility and dedicate them to the service of the righteous cause of the Giver of all good and perfect gifts.

As the nation has prospered, let all the people show that they are worthy to prosper by rededicating America to the service of God and man.

Therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, hereby proclaim and fix Thursday, the 27th day of November, as a day for national thanksgiving.

I recommend that the people gather in their places of worship, and at the family altars, and offer up their thanks for the goodness which has been shown to them in such a multitude of ways.

Especially, I urge them to supplicate the Throne of Grace, that they may gather strength from their tribulations, that they may gain humility from their victories, that they may bear without complaining the burdens that shall be placed upon them, and that they may be increasingly worthy in all ways for the blessing that shall come to them.

In witness whereof, I have hereto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the United States.

Done at the City of Washington, this sixth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-four, and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and forty-ninth.

(Seal.)

CALVIN COOLIDGE,
By the President.
CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

Real Bravery.—

When a break occurred in the gasoline line of a French passenger aeroplane recently, cutting off the supply of fuel, a gallant mechanic crawled out on one of the wings and held the ends of the feed pipe together for forty-five minutes. He was very badly frozen when released, but the plane was enabled to land safety.

Senator Lodge Succumbs.—

Henry Cabot Lodge, who for thirty-one years has represented Massachusetts in the United States Senate—perhaps the longest continuous service in the history of that body—died in a Cambridge hospital at the age of seventy-four, following a stroke. For years the Republican floor leader in the Senate and Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, his influence was great, but his leadership in the fight against the League of Nations proposal is the thing for which he will probably be remembered longest.

Japanese Exclusion.—

The Methodist Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, in its recent session at East Orange, N. J., addressed President Coolidge and Secretary of State Hughes, favoring changes in the present immigration laws as they relate to the Japanese. They feel that the elimination of race prejudice and the promotion of international cooperation demand a reconstruction of the law.

A good many people feel the same way about it. There ought to be some other way, and if we search deep enough we can find that other way, and it will accord with the teachings of Jesus.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Dr. W. W. Staley spent last Monday in Richmond. He stopped at THE SUN office to say hello!

The North Carolina Conference is meeting this week with the First Christian Church at Raleigh, N. C. The session was called to order by Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., president.

Dr. W. T. Walters, of the Richmond Church, left Monday to attend the North Carolina Conference at Raleigh, N. C. He will speak in the interest of religious education.

The "wets" never let up in their organized effort and continuous fight to abolish prohibition and bring back drunkenness and debauchery. There are now pending fifty-nine bills before Congress, each clamoring for favorable action to repeal or modify the Volstead act.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, First Church, Norfolk, is putting on a stewardship canvass in his Church, and to that end ordered a supply of tithers' stewardship cards recently. These tithing stewardship cards are now for free distribution by pastors desiring them for their congregations. They will be sent on application to Mission Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

The superdreadnaught Washington, one of the great war vessels of the United States Navy, which was ordered "scrapped" before it was finished, cost $35,000,000. What if the Church, in handling its funds, were to act as silly and as extravagantly as governments? Just put that $35,000,000 of good money collected from the taxpayers down as a price paid to the short-sightedness, folly and extravagance of war.

The opening services of the First Christian Church at Raleigh, N. C., were held November 23, 1924. The sermon was by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, N. C. The afternoon sermon was preached by Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., and at the evening services Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., preached. Mrs. Roy O. Caveness presided at the organ and a chorus choir rendered a fine musical program. A full account of the exercises of this magnificent Church will appear next week.

Palm Street Church, Greensboro, Rev. H. B. Hall, pastor, has recently made quite helpful improvement upon its building by putting in new windows, painting, etc. This Church is planning for further improvement as soon as arrangements are completed. Its beloved pastor is leading the Church on to praiseworthy activity and progress. The Sunday School is now giving one offering a month to missions, and the mission talks before the school are exceedingly helpful and interesting.

The fund for general benevolences of the Methodist Church has suffered a severe shrinkage. It is forty-two per cent less than the previous year, and less by some two million dollars than the denominational leaders had been led to expect. On the other hand, the home and foreign woman's missionary societies have raised more than ever before, their receipts being approximately half that of the entire Church for general benevolences of the Church. This falling off in funds deals a severe blow at the work of the Methodist Church.

Mrs. W. H. Andrews, mission superintendent in our Suffolk Christian Sunday School, has a very unique and attractive method of presenting to the school a missionary train. This train runs in the Suffolk Sunday School two Sundays of the month, one is mission Sunday, and the other is Orphanage Sunday. When the train has run schedules either to Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Va., or to the Orphanage at Elon College, N. C., and words of explanation have been given of the trip, the opportunity and the needs of the places visited, fares are called for—that is, the offering is taken. We are presenting, as best we can, to SUN readers in next week's issue, Mrs. Andrew's idea, which she contributes to THE SUN because many requests had come to her for the plan. Other Sunday Schools may run a similar train to good effect, and if the idea is not clear, the reader could find out more fully the whole plan and schedule by addressing a request to Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Suffolk, Va.

The third Sunday of November was a most happy and wholesome day in the history and experience of Bethlehem Church, Alamance County, N. C., Rev. J. F. Apple, pastor. It was the first Sunday after Conference, and the pastor was exceedingly anxious, as every pastor should be, that his Church begin the new year with definite plans and specific objectives in view. In was called "Rally Day" at Bethlehem, and wisely, for the people of the Church and community were called upon to rally to the support of the Church in its undertakings for the coming year. Cards were passed out for the members of the congregation, on which card an opportunity was given for every member to sign up for some line of definite Church work during the year. In addition to this, the Church had a debt of something like $300 on its recent additions to the building. The most of this debt was provided for with pledges or cash on rally day. The Sunday School, as well as the Church at Bethlehem seems to be in a flourishing condition. It was a great privilege to be there last Sunday. THE SUN's editor spoke at the morning service, following the pastor, who had presented the plans of the year, and Miss Gertrude Brown, of Elon College, N. C., recently elected corresponding secretary of the Woman's Board of the Southern Convention, spoke on "Missions" in the afternoon. We bespeak for Bethlehem the coming year one of its happiest and most prosperous, under the leadership of its active and consecrated pastor, with the assistance of Bro. Carl Sutton, the devoted superintendent of the Sunday School and efficient treasurer of the Church.

As a result of the missionary arrangement in many of the Churches of Eastern Virginia on Sunday, November 16th, when different speakers presented the claims of the Christian Missionary Association, fifty-eight new memberships, totaling $455, had resulted, with many of the leading Churches of the Conference to be heard from, as reported by Rev. James H. Lightbourne on November 19th. By this co-operative effort, it would seem that the next session of the Christian Missionary Association, which is to meet at Rosemont Church on Tuesday, December 2d, in its thirty-third annual session, will be the best and will bring into the treasury of the association more funds than in any year of its history. We take off our hats and make our bow most graciously and gratefully to Rev. James H. Lightbourne, president, and to Bro. C. D. West, mission secretary, who seem to be the moving spirits in this very excellent piece of work. This association has weathered the storm of many winters, and seems now to be not only on safe seas, but also to have wise hands at the helm, with the port of a successful journey clearly in view. It would seem to be a great pity that the association in the other Conferences have not continuously and persistently pursued their course through the years. It takes time, and often requires patience, and always persistence, for seeds and plants in the vineyard of the Lord to come to growth and maturity. And many of us grow impatient and give up and are willing to disband when a little more effort and energy, consecration and devotion would carry matters to a hearty growth and steady development.

HOLLAND, VA.

On Sunday, December 9th, the Brotherhood Bible Class of Holland Christian Sunday School entertained the men of the Bible classes of the Suffolk and Holy Neck Christian schools and the Holland and South Quay Baptist schools. A program of instrumental and vocal music and addreses was effectively carried out and enjoyed.

Mr. H. Woodward, of the Suffolk school, taught the lesson for the day. One hundred and eighty-eight men constituted the visiting group, one hundred and twenty-one of them from Suffolk. The school for the day had an attendance of 421. PASTOR.

ELON NOTES.

I am sure gratitude should be expressed as well as felt. Silence is very frequently misconstrued. For three months I have enjoyed the privilege of living and laboring among my esteemed brethren of the South. I had no misgivings in my coming. I expected to like it when I accepted the invitation to the field of labor. My highest expectations have no only been realized, but they have been surpassed.

No Church has ever proven more loyal to an incoming pastor. The responsiveness of the membership to every attempt to go forward is commendable. On the second Sunday of November, more than forty members were received into the regular and associate membership of the Church. "Father and Son" Sunday, also the week-night banquet, were well attended, and many proofs of profit and pleasure were in evidence.

The privilege of attending the North Carolina Conference has been much appreciated. Wider acquaintance with the leaders of our work in this section will, I trust, be mutually helpful. It is a real joy to witness how universally appreciative the constituency is of Elon College. The faithful service of the sacrificing men and women who have been and who are associated with the work of the institution has begotten such confidence in the Church that Elon College is rightly the pride of the whole Church. No greater unsolved problem presents itself to the Church today than its problem of Christian education. The manner of support given to our Church colleges is a good index to our future life and strength as a Church.

May the Good Lord help each of us to see and perform our duty. W. S. ALEXANDER, College Pastor.

THE C. M. A. TO MEET.

The good people of the Rosemont Christian Church are ready for 200 delegates, which they hope will attend the Christian Missionary Association, to meet with them December 9, 1924.

Take Money Point car at Union Station; get off at Rosemont Stop. There will be a welcome address and response, and a blessing asked when we eat. See THE SUN for the program. Come! We will be waiting and ready to receive you in "Southern style." B. F. BLACK,
Pastor.

HOW MISSING LINKS ARE MADE.

By William Evans, D. D.
(In Sunday School Times.)

In the hall of "The Age of Man" in the American Museum of Natural History, New York City, you may see, in a glass case, an "ape-like man," said by certain scientists to be "a missing link," connecting man with his monkey progenitors.

Teachers of the high and grammar schools of New York City are in the habit of taking their pupils to see this "exhibit" of man's ape-like ancestry. The pupils are instructed in the so-called "established facts" of the Darwinian theory of the origin of man. These young, receptive and formative minds are taught to look upon that strange apishly-human creature in the glass case as "a missing link" in evidence that the human race is descended from apes. All this takes place in New York City, in this day of such wonderful enlightenment, knowledge, and culture.

The strange creature in the glass case has a name; he is known as "The Piltdown Man." He is thus named because he came—that is, what little there was of him to begin with—from a farm near Piltdown Common, Fletching, Sussex, Eng. This is the story of the "find." Mr. Charles Dawson came across some men digging in a gravel pit near Piltdown Common. While digging, they uncovered what seemed to Mr. Dawson to be "a small piece of parietal bone, unusually thick," and apparently "human." Mr. Dawson estimated its age to be, in all probability, over 300,000 years. After some years (not days, nor weeks, nor months; but "years," mark you) another piece of bone was uncovered in the same place; this "find" was "somewhat larger," and belonged to "the frontal region of a skull, including a portion of the ridge extending over the left eyebrow." After further digging, "a piece of a jawbone, another small piece of occipital bone from the skull, and a canine tooth" were found.

Mr. Eoanthropus—"Dawn Man."

With this "find," which, as has been well said, "a juggler could well conceal in the palm of his hand," the famous "Piltdown Man" was built. In the construction of this "ape-man," Mr. Dawson was assisted by Dr. A. Smith Woodward, of the British Museum, a noted scientist. And so there came into being a new creature—Mr. Eoanthropus, the Dawn Man, the man a la Dawson.

The creation of this "missing link" is extremely interesting. It is but natural that it should be, for is he not to be somewhat of a half-way house or stopping-place between the crude ape and the highly developed man of today? So this strange being, this "half-way" creature, must be made in the "image" and "likeness" conceived in the mind of its creator. In the beginning, "God made man upright," but, alas, as we here behold, man "has sought out many inventions," things after "his own image and likeness."

Certain presuppositions must, naturally, govern and determine this "ape-man's" creation. The "missing link," this "connecting link," must be constructed according to some certain preconceived "theory." For the moment, at least, facts must not worry the creators of Mr. "Piltdown Man."

In the first place, this "missing link" must be half ape and half man, as near ape-like and human-like at the same time as possible. It must be neither the one thing nor the other distinctively, but a mixture of both. So, with this "assumption," "presupposition," "theory," the learned doctor set to work to build, out of this meager bit of evidence, a new and strange creature after "his own likeness"; that is his own conception as to what this strange creature, half-ape and half-man, halfway between the monkey and man, should look like. Behold, what magic! What legerdemain! What creative art and skill!

The matter of the brain capacity possessed by this strange creature is of the utmost importance, and must, at the outset, be definitely settled. Assuming, as the doctor did, that these "finds" belonged to a creature half-ape and half-man, this "missing link" must, therefore, be given a skull with a brain capacity about one-half of that of a human being today. The ape has a skull with a c. c. capacity of 600, whereas the average, normal man of today possesses a c. c. capacity of about 1,500. An average must be struck. Why not give this half-ape, half-human creature a c. c. capacity of about 1,070? Certainly, there is no reason in the world why its creator should not thus endow it. So, accordingly, a skull is formed for Mr. "Piltdown Man" with a c. c. capacity of 1,070—halfway between human and ape. The matter of a brain is now settled, and with that goes, of course, the settlement of the matter of Mr. "Piltdown's" age. He is 300,000 years old—that is to say, it has taken man that many years to bring and develop him from being like Mr. "Piltdown Man" to man as we see him today. So far, so good. The doctor is pleased.

But, alas! for the poor fellow. Other scientists will insist on examining this halfway creature. Their examination leads to an "expose," a "reconstruction." These scientists are sure that some mistakes have been made. Mr. Piltdown must be made over again. He is in sore need of changes and improvements in many respects.

Along comes Prof. Arthur Keith, curator of the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, London, Eng., an exceedingly clever and famous scientist, a most eminent scholar by general consensus of learned opinion. He makes a very careful examination of "Mr. Piltdown," and finds that, instead of having a brain capacity of 1,070, the poor creature ought to have a c. c. capacity of nearer 1,500. This correction is serious and demands that our "Piltdown Man" must be considered as rather "up to date," instead of being, as its creator maintained, somewhat "over 300,000 years old." This is indeed a most serious matter, for it gives the "missing link" of some 300,000 years ago a good place among the men of today. But then what do a few hundred thousand years matter to some scientists!

To corroborate Prof. Keith, Prof. Henry Fairfield Osborn appears claiming that the brain capacity of the "ape-man" is "well above the capacity of many white, normal, human skulls today, and far above that of the Australian." And, further, as though the humiliation were not complete enough for the creator of this "progenitor" of ours, the noted German anatomist G. Schwalbe says that, after careful examination, he feels compelled to abandon this "missing link," and declares that "the proper restoration of the 'Piltdown Man' fragments would make them belong not to any preceding stage of man, but to a well-developed, good-sized Homo Sapiens, the true man of today." And so, alas for the brain capacity and the age of Mr. Piltdown Man, our ape-human ancestor, the thing our forefathers looked like some 300,000 years ago!

Mr. Dawson, the creator of our "progenitor," this "missing link," was convinced that the tooth found in the gravel should have its place in this newly made being as "a canine tooth, on the right side of the lower jaw, at an angle suggestive of the ape." And so that is where the tooth found its resting-place. It would give to the lower part of our progenitor's face an ape-like appearance —just the thing desired. And so the manufacturer looked at his work with evident approval and satisfaction.

But again, alas, for the poor "missing link"! He is to receive another awful shock. That tooth must come out. It is in the wrong place. Prof. W. K. Gregory, assisted by Prof. G. S. Miller (who have written about the matter, respectively, in the Am. Mus. Journ., vol. 14, 1914, pp. 189-200, and Smithsonian Misc. Coll., vol. 65, No. 12, November, 1915), after a most careful examination of our "ape-man," declare the necessity of further "modifications of the reconstruction based on the fact that the tooth described and used as the right lower canine was no lower tooth of any kind at all, and no right tooth either, but a left tooth and an upper tooth at that." So that tooth must come out. Just exactly where to put that "canine" tooth nobody seemed to know. No proper place could be determined for it. On this, however, these scientists were decided—that it did not come from the age Mr. Dawson said it did, and, therefore, they ought to knock off several hundred thousand years from the age of Mr. "Piltdown Man."

The Dawn Man Goes to the Dentist!

To add to the utter dismay already created by these new "discoveries" in connection with our progenitor, other scientists "maintained that the tooth did not belong to that skull at all." Yea, to crown it all, and to make confusion worse confounded, Prof. Miller tells us that "neither the tooth nor jaw belong to that kind of an ape-man, but to a fossil chimpanzee." Such a statement, it can easily be seen, threw consternation into the camp, for, according to the very best scientific authorities, no chimpanzee ever lived in the British Isles where these fragments, from which our famous Mr. "Piltdown Man" was formed, were found.

The effect of such "reconstruction," "transformation," and "modifying" of our newly made creature, can easily be imagined. For before the transfer of the missing canine from the lower jaw where it had no business to be, to the upper jaw, where it belonged, the scientists had laid special emphasis on that all-important "canine tooth." They regarded it as justifying them in asserting that "the skull represented an entirely new type of man in the making," and upon this plan of wholly gratuitous invention they established their "ape-like jaw and ape-like face crowned with a human skull." Now, all their conclusions are reversed; their reckoning was altogether wrong—some 300,000 years out of the way. The brain capacity had been shown to be an error; the tooth had been found to occupy the wrong place, and now to be told that Mr. "Piltdown Man" had the jaw of a chimpanzee, and all this by proof that was "convincing and irrefutable," as declared by Prof. George Grant MacCurdy, of Yale University, who, in Science, February 18, 1916, pp. 228-231, spoke of the humiliating Piltdown exposure, referring to it as a creature "robbed of a muzzle that ill became him."

Such staggering and damaging blows could do naught but shake the "ape" out of the "ape-man," and so, naturally, this newly made creature now becomes a direct human ancestor of our race belonging to more recent times. He has been so thoroughly "reconstructed" as to be almost beyond recognition; surely he is not by any means the creature he was formerly supposed to be.

These experiments in man-making, while they do not inspire us with much confidence in what are called "established scientific facts," nor create within us much faith in so-called "missing links," do, nevertheless, touch the vein of humor that is within us. This "established" ape-man, you see, is not an "ape-man" at all. He has had all the "ape" there was supposed to be in him knocked out of him. He begins to appear a wee bit human now. We are progressing, you see! One wonders what Prof. Knight, of the Ameri-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE GRACE OF GIVING THANKS.

"O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever.

"O give thanks unto the God of gods, for His mercy endureth forever.

"O give thanks to the Lord of lords, for His mercy endureth forever."—Psa. 136:1-3.

Thanksgiving Day is an American institution, and had a beginning. But Thanksgiving Day was not made—it grew. It was neither created, invented nor discovered—it came out of the heart of a greateful people, as a flower in spring breaks naturally and becomingly into budding. Of small beginning and without pomp or ceremony, it has swept our entire nation, and is now one of our most universally observed days and events.

When their first crops were gathered in 1621, Governor Bradford desired his New England colonists to show their gratitude and have a day of feasting, praise and prayer. To prepare for the day, he sent out hunters to shoot wild turkey and other game, that all might have sufficient meat for the feast of the day. The hunters returning well laden with rich trophies of field and forest, Governor Bradford proclaimed a day of rejoicing and thanksgiving, "especially together with praise and prayer." The custom of the Governors of our States proclaiming a day of thanksgiving in the fall has persisted till our time, though not observed annually and by all Governors of our States, since the Bradford proclamation in 1621.

In 1623, on a given date, the colonists were called together in the midst of a wiltering drought to pray for rain. During the day of fasting and prayer, the drought was broken, and petition was turned into praise, intercession was changed to thanksgiving.

During the War of the Revolution, Thanksgiving Day came to be a colonial custom, recommended by the Congress of the Colonies. In 1864, at the insistence of a good woman, Mrs. Sarah Josepha Hale, editor at the time of Godey's Lady Book, President Abraham Lincoln issued a proclamation calling upon the entire nation to observe the last Thursday in November as a day of thanksgiving, and since that time each succeeding President of the United States has annually observed the custom, the Governors of the several States emphasizing the proclamation and the event by themselves calling upon the peoples of the States to assemble in their Churches and places of worship and give thanks to the Giver of all good for the bounties and blessings of the year.

While this custom obtains generally in the United States, much biblical authority and prestige is found for such an event. A most beautiful and striking motto for the day can be taken from the words of Nehemiah, who in the long, long ago proclaimed a solemn and glorious Thanksgiving Day in these words, "Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions unto them for whom nothing is prepared; for this day is holy unto our Lord! neither be ye sorry, for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

The Jews had their days of feasting and thanksgiving with right glad and cheery hearts. Again and again and again the various writers of the psalms call upon the people, saying, "O that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of men."

It is a good and gracious act to sing praises and give thanks to our Lord. The past year has been rich and bountiful in benefits and in blessings, and we shall be an ungrateful people indeed if we do not render some meed of praise, gratitude and thanksgiving to Him who gave all and who is the Owner and Sovereign Lord of all.

We are stewards in charge for a season. It is a cold and hard heart indeed that will not acknowledge with gratitude the hand from which come all the blessing, bounties and benefits of life.

To cultivate the grace of gratitude is most comely and helpful, and if on this Thanksgiving Day we may, to a degree, cultivate that grace, the day will not be in vain.

And all have much to be thankful for. There is a story of a wealthy Maryland slave-owner in the old days, that of a man named Dorsey Gough. He was riding one day to one of his plantations when, by the roadside from a cabin, came the sound of a voice in praise and prayer. Listening attentively, Gough discovered that a negro from a neighboring plantation was fervently leading his (Gough's) slaves in thanksgiving for the blessings they enjoyed even in their hard lot. Gough's heart was touched, and, it is said, with emotion, exclaimed: "Alas! O Lord, I have my thousands and tens of thousands, and yet ungrateful wretch that I am; I never thank Thee, as this poor slave does, who has scarcely clothes to put on, or food to satisfy his hunger." From that hour, Dorsey Gough was a different man, and never forgot the lesson of thanksgiving taught him by a slave. "O that men would praise the Lord for His goodness and for His wonderful works to the children of man."

GREAT RELIGIOUS OPPORTUNITY.

The quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in America, to be held in Atlanta, December 3d to 9th, will afford the South such a religious opportunity as rarely comes to any section of the country. There is not in existence another body so widely representative of Protestantism in its all-'round mission, and probably no other that could bring together so large a proportion of the world's religious leadership as will be present at this meeting. Twenty-eight of the great Protestant denominations of America, with a combined membership of twenty millions, will be officially represented, and many others will have unofficial representation. Hundreds of the ablest leaders in the various Churches will be there, and scores will be on the program for addresses and discussions.

Among the speakers will be Dr. Robert E. Speer, Governor William E. Sweet, Governor Carl E. Milliken, Bishop W. F. McDowell, Bishop F. F. Reese, Bishop E. D. Mouzon, Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Dr. Henry H. Sweets, Dr. Thornton Whaling, Dr. Ashby Jones, Dr. Peter Ainslie, Dr. Chas. E. Burton, Dr. James I. Vance, Dr. Alva Taylor, Dr. Wm. Adams, Dr. Frank Mason North, Bishop F. K. McConnell, Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Dr. R. H. Potter, Sherwood Eddy, Samuel M. Zwemer, and many others of national reputation. There will be also a number of distinguished delegates from abroad, among them Sir Willoughoy Dickinson of London, Dr. Julius Richter of Berlin, Dr. Adolph Keller of Switzerland, and Rev. A. K. Reischauer of Japan.

The general theme of the meeting will be "The Church in the World," and will cover addresses and discussions on personal evangelism, Christian education, missions, race relations, industry, international relations, war, and kindred topics—all of them among the livest issues of the times. The discussions of the various subjects will be led by the most competent authorities to be found in all the country, and cannot fail to be of the greatest interest and value. The Churches of Atlanta, on whose invitation the meeting is to be held, are anxious that the people of the South shall take full advantage of it. Pastors and others in positions of religious leadership will find it especially helpful. The public will be welcomed to all the sessions.

The Federal Council of Churches is not concerned at all with the uniting of denominations, but represents the effort of the twenty-eight constituent bodies to find a way of working together at the common tasks which are too big for any one of them. Founded in 1908, it has for several years been recognized as one of the most useful religious agencies in existence. As a means by which the various Churches may speak and act together when they so desire, it greatly increases their influence in dealing with the vast problems they are called upon to solve.

Following are the members of the Federal Council: Baptist, Northern Convention and National Convention; Seventh-Day Baptist; Free Baptist; Christian Church, General Convention; Churches of God in North America, General Eldership; Congregational Churches; Disciples of Christ; General Conference Evangelical Church; Evangelical Synod of North America; Society of Friends, Orthodox; United Lutheran Church in America; Methodist Episcopal Church; Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Methodist Protestant Church; Primitive Methodist Church, U. S. A.; African Methodist Episcopal; African M. E., Zion; Colored M. E. Church in America; Moravian, Unitas Fratrum; Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.; Presbyterian Church U. S.; United Presbyterian Church; Protestant Episcopal Church; Reformed Episcopal Church; Reformed Church in America; Reformed Church in U. S.; Christian Reformed Church, North America; United Brethren in Christ.

EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

At the appointed time and place, the Eastern North Carolina Conference was called to order by Dr. W. C. Wicker, president of last session. Devotional service was conducted by Rev. J. D. Wicker. After the enrollment of Churches and delegates, organization was effected by electing the following officers for the coming year: Rev.

J. Lee Johnson, president; Rev. W. C. Wicker, vice-president; Rev. J. Fuller Johnson, secretary; Carl C. Whitaker, assistant secretary, and W. J. Balentine, treasurer.

The address of welcome was delivered by the pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, and the response was made on behalf of the Conference by Prof. L. L. Vaughan. Then followed an address by Dr. W. D. Parry, the subject assigned being "The Christian Church." Visiting brethren present were invited to seats as deliberative members and introduced to Conference. The entertainment committee announced the program for the noon hour, and Conference was adjourned with the benediction.

After a bountiful repast, Conference convened, and devotional service was conducted by Rev. J. E. Franks. The reading of ministerial reports and Church letters were called for. These showed progress for the year.

The executive committee's report was received. Vacancies on standing committees were filled, and special committees appointed. Considerable time was given to the discussion of "Stewardship Plans for Our Conference." The discussion was inspirational and very helpful. Other delegates who had arrived were enrolled. Several miscellaneous items of business were transacted. The Conference adjourned.

Second Day.

Devotional service was conducted by Dr. W. S. Alexander. Minutes of the preceding day were read and approved. Delegates were enrolled. The president then called the order of business, and the report of the committee on social service was read by Rev. J. E. Franks, chairman. The committee on education made a partial report. Then followed an address by Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent, on "The Church's Opportunity Through its Orphanage." It was followed by an offering for the benefit of the Orphanage. In the absence of Dr. W. A. Harper, the Conference was addressed by Dr. W. S. Alexander, college pastor. Following this address, Rev. B. J. Howard read the report of the committee on religious literature, to which he spoke in detail. THE CHRISTIAN SUN was represented by the editor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and Managing Editor P. J. Kernodle. Several new subscribers were added to the list. Adjourned.

The afternoon devotional services were conducted. The report on superannuation was presented by Mr. K. B. Johnson, and adopted. The report on home missions was read by Rev. J. Lee Johnson, and discussed at length. Following the adoption of this report, the increased apportionment adopted by the Southern Christian Convention was approved. Rev. J. Fuller Johnson presented the report on foreign missions. Dr. J. O. Atkinson spoke on "Stewardship and Missions." The report on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor was presented by Mr. C. H. Stephenson, president of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The report was adopted and the members of Conference invited to attend the next Convention. After announcements, the Conference adjourned, with benediction.

Third Day.

The third day's session of the Conference met. Devotional service, led by Rev. R. L. Williamson. The committee on place of meeting reported, and the Conference decided to meet with the Church at Liberty, Vance County. The report on education was submitted by Rev. R. L. Williamson. Revs. H. C. Caviness and J. C. Cummings were received into the Conference, and Rev. J. C. Cummings was ordained an elder by the presbytery—Revs. R. L. Williamson, W. C. Wicker, and J. E. Franks. The annual address by Dr. W. C. Wicker was well received.

The report of the committee on resolutions was unanimously adopted, expressing the thanks of the Conference for the cordial entertainment by the Church and community. Adjourned, with benediction by Rev. J. D. Wicker.

THE FEAR OF GOD.

Since Adam ate the forbidden fruit, there has been too little of the fear of God in the world. Men have feared ghosts and demons, and to some extent the devil, but they have had little fear of the God who made them and in whose hand their breath is. When God has given then a knowledge of Himself and of His will concerning them, they have not cared to retain the knowledge, and have been at no pains to observe His will.

We hear many expressions of what the world most needs today. Of course, its supreme need is the totality of the religion of Jesus Christ. But if we are to mention only one item in this religion, we should not hesitate to mention the fear of God as the world's greatest need. The demoralized state of Christendom is due to a lack of the fear of God. The crime wave and the almost universal lawlessness are due to the lack of the fear of God. "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of the children of men is fully set in them to do evil."

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." The lack of this fear is the beginning of folly. It is "fools who make a mock of sin." The world is full of such fools. They use sin to season their talk and to spice their pastimes, and to popularize their amusements.

One of the most distressing features of the religious teaching of our day is that much of it is directed to destroying the fear of God. It scoffs at the idea of hell, and rails against any representation of God that makes hell a possibility. It joins Ingersoll and the ancient Gnostics in denouncing the God of the Old Testament if he is to be held responsible for the flood, and the destruction of the Canaanites and the other manifold cruelties with which His name is associated. No matter how wicked men may be, how diabolical in their treatment of each other, God must be as gentle and tender with them as a doting mother. Men may steep themselves in crime and saturate themselves with impurity till they make a hell on earth. But this will not justify God in giving them an opportunity to choose a hell for themselves hereafter. Men may wallow in sin till their flesh becomes rotten and their souls brutalized, but God's pity must provide something soft and soothing for them when they have reached the end of their earthly tether.

Surely it is as manifest as the sun in heaven, that human society cannot hold together without some place is found for justice. There must be jails and gibbets to hold in check human depravity. Society is suffering because there are not more hangings. Criminals multiply and crimes become ever more and more devilish while justice lags. Thousands of men and women lose their lives annually at the hands of murderers because the hangmen are idle. In one comparatively small State there is an average of one homicide a day, and the reason is that it is almost impossible for a man to be mean enough to get himself hung.

Everybody knows that justice is absolutely necessary in a wicked world like this to prevent anarchy, and the destruction of all that makes life worth living. Yet with this fact staring them in the face, multitudes of religious leaders are doing what in them lies to rob God of this attribute, and in the same measure to rob man of all reason to fear God. They wear the name of Christ, and they are loud in their praise of Christ, and at the same time they paint the historic Christ in false colors. They ascribe to Him as His crowning achievement the doctrine of the universal Fatherhood of God, a doctrine which, as they expound it, He not only did not teach, but expressly denied. He called the Pharisees "offsprings of vipers," and told them plainly that they were the children of the devil and that the lusts of their father they would do. There are thousands of pulpits today that are ringing with the praises of Jesus, and are repudiating His leadership. They are making a travesty of His gospel by presenting only one side of His character. They avowedly do not believe in the devil, nor in the fire prepared for the devil and his angels. Yet Jesus stated it as the sum of His mission that He came to destroy the works of the devil, and to save men from his power. They are doing what in them lies to uproot the fear that Jesus inculcated. Said Jesus: "But I will warn you whom ye shall fear—fear Him who, after He hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear Him." Of course, if there is no hell, Jesus was just bluffing, trying to frighten them with an ignis fatuus.

Jesus knew what men needed. He knew they needed to fear God, and He preached a God whom they did well to fear, a God who deserved to be feared, a God who hated wickedness and who had prepared a hell for it. They need to fear God today just as much as they needed to fear Him 1900 years ago. All the discoveries of science and inventions of art have not altered the situation. The heart of the children of men is still fully set in them to do evil, and there is nothing that would prove more salutary than for them to believe in a God who will "by no means clear the guilty" and who still has a hell for the incorrigibly wicked. A belief of this kind would do more to secure quiet and orderly lives, and to promote human welfare in general than all the mushy stuff that is preached as a substitute for the true, historic gospel.—Presbyterian Standard

GOLDEN RULE SUNDAY.

Sunday, December 7th, has been set aside and designated as "Golden Rule Sunday." On that day every family is asked to serve a frugal meal, and send the difference between that meal and the usually elaborate Sunday dinner to the Near East Relief. Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavors are also asked to take a generous offering on that day for the same purpose. There are thousands of fatherless and motherless children depending upon that offering for life; children without home, without country, except such as is provided for them by the Near East Relief. Jesus is again feeding the five thousand, and just as the little Lad and the disciples of old helped Him to feed the five thousand, so must we help Him today. The need is urgent, and we must give in order that others may live. The hands of little children bringing their gifts for the Near East, and the little children of that far-away land receiving those gifts are together forging chains of friendship which shall bind the world together in such a way as statesmen, however great, have never known. The children of the world will enter into the spirit of Him who fed the multitude long ago, and helping Him to feed the multitude again, they will in His spirit destroy hate and war. They will, in truth, "not learn war any more."

"Golden Rule Sunday should be borne in mind and observed. Suppose it were your boy, your girl who starved, and, "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also unto them." Think on these things, and serve only a simple meal and give, that others may live. Help Jesus to feed another multitude.—S.M.L.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Work is the easiest thing in the world. Work is the most universal thing in the world. Work is the most satisfactory thing in the world. Work is the most useful thing in the world. Work is the most productive thing in the world. Work is the most profitable thing in the world. Work is the most religious thing in the world. Jesus said: "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." "Work out your own salvation." All nature works. Work is the normal state of man. What the Church needs is a working membership; not a membership that works simply at their week-day business, but in the "vineyard" of the Lord. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work; thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates." The six days are the working days, the days when men work for themselves, for others, and for God. "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he both denies the faith and is worse than an infidel." "Whoso hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the first fruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barnes be filled with plenty, and thy presses burst out with new wine." God should have His part of our work. That is service to Him, when we provide for our own, help the needy, and give to the Lord as He has prospered us.

Then comes the Sabbath for rest and worship. "Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worship at His footstool." "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve." Work and worship are twins, and both are essential to character and prosperity. The tribes that do not work and worship God have little character and little prosperity. Christianity furnishes the motive and the conditions for work and worship. The wealth of the world has been produced by Christian nations. The big business men who do not serve and worship God, who ignore or neglect the Church, are parasites, deriving their prosperity and protection from Christianity and making no adequate return for what they enjoy. The needy poor, who receive help from Christian conditions, either through individual Christians, Church or civic institutions, are in the same class, with the exception that they are usually less competent to realize the situation. If the poor would identify themselves with the Church and be faithful in attendance, and if the prosperous would do the same thing, all questions of need for men and the cause of Christ would find happy solution in a Christian way. Christian work is the easiest thing in the Church and the most satisfactory. There is nothing so hard as doing nothing. Somebody knew what it meant when he said: "An idle brain is the devil's workshop." To sit upon a cushioned seat eight hours a day would be harder than sawing wood or shoveling coal. Nothing is more pathetic than a person without a job. It is better to work without pay than to do nothing for pay—sinecures never made men. The dissatisfied Church member is the member that does nothing for others or for God. Spiritual work is as essential as material work.

ELON LETTER.

Youth always faces the future. The only direction that really interests youth is forward. Youth is the time of physical growth. It is also the time of mental enlargement, of spiritual expansion, of quickening idealism. Youth is always active. Work challenges youth. Something to do is a prime requisite for youth. In the absence of experience, guidance and direction from older persons is especially required in order to prevent mistakes. Youth is optimistic and hopeful. Great sacrifice for a loved cause does not deter youth from entering into a hard situation. It is the age of altruism and of self-devotion. Youth is open-minded. The settled convictions, not to say the prejudices, of age are unknown to youth. And youth will follow its leaders. It is also necessary to say that youth will have leaders, and oftentimes the would-be leaders of youth are incapable of leading them, because they do not understand or do not sympathize with youth or do not have the confidence of youth.

We hear much in this day about the excesses of youth, of flappers, bobbed-hair bandits, mashers and dudes. We are told that young people, in our day, are unconventional and radical; in fact, that they have revolted against the elders and the established order of things. Stanley High says they have a right to revolt, because they were betrayed in the World War. They went, millions of them, from every land to find against autocracy and to make future wars impossible. They asked nothing for themselves. They offered all, and an appalling number of them paid all. When the war was over, they found privilege more deeply internched than ever, with selfishness controlling the destinies of the world in every realm. They returned poor and out of a job, to find that in America the World War had produced a noxious crop of twenty-three thousand new millionaires, and that the League of Nations' pact had been defeated in advance of its publication by a partisan Senate, unwilling to consider any measure that really promised the termination of war.

This is not the place to justify the so-called revolt of youth nor to condemn it. There is a growing conviction that youth has not revolted except in spots, and that even the spots are not nearly so numerous as the noise we hear would indicate. It is my firm conviction that the youth of our day are the finest material human history has known for building a Christian social order and founding the kingdom of God on earth. I have confidence in the youth I know, and my judgment tells me that youth, in the mass, corresponds quite accurately with the youth I know. I have confidence in youth to believe they will make good, provided the rich endowments of their young lives are properly attitudinized. There is but one way to insure this, and that is to interpret life and its opportunities to them in terms of the teaching of Jesus.

Jesus has a message for the youth of our day, and nothing is more certain, in my judgment, than that youth will respond whole-heartedly to that message when they know Jesus and His program for them. Acquaintance with Jesus is the fundamental need of youth. For them, as for those who heard of Him during His earthly life, the invitation is open: "Come; come unto me." Youth need to know Jesus. They need to know Him as He is portrayed in the gospels, as the Man of service and action, of prayer and joyous pastime, of sympathy for and devotion to His brother-man, of patience and sacrifice, of conscious fellowship with God. They need to know Him in history, the marvelous transformations devotion to His has wrought in the organizations, institutions, and life ideals of men and of the social order. There is a vast difference between the condition of women and children and prisoners and the poor today and nineteen hundred years ago. Jesus is the explanation. They need to know Him as a spiritual presence and comforting friend today. Young people must learn to fellowship Jesus in prayer, in meditation, in expectant waiting. With such knowledge of Him they can confidently, hopefully face the future.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

We look upon the founding of Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala., with much pride and satisfaction. Very commendable pledges were made by many in order to have the college located at Wadley, and the college was located here upon the good faith of these large subscribers to pay every dollar they subscribed on the five-year plan just as soon as due. Some have said they would pay, unless they were providentially hindered; but God does not prevent any from doing their duty—other things may. A pledge to some worthy cause is just as binding as a note, and even more so. This obligation should be one of the first things to claim our attention, and God forbid that any should have ease of conscience until they have done their utmost to meet their sacred obligation, which is so much needed at the present time.

The enterprise has been an adventure of faith in God, self and our fellows. Faith in our entire constituency to go the second mile; the sacrifice to the limit of their means, energy, time, abilities to the cause of Christian education in this very needy section of our Southland. Through our prayers and sacrifices we have completed our first building and have enrolled this year, up to this time, 108 students. The good work is just in its beginning.

We owe on our present building and equipment about $14,000 in various amounts, and some of the notes are past due, so here is the reason for our urgent solicitation upon the part of each subscriber to pay on their pledge all that is due at this time, and to do it now, for today is the day of salvation—tomorrow may be too late.

We are making a strenuous effort to collect what is due on all pledges made to Bethlehem College, in order to liquidate our debts, and then start on our new building program which is absolutely necessary to our future progress.

Now, we feel quite sure that all are deeply interested in our own Bethlehem College, and will be more than glad to have the opportunity to pay all they have subscribed to this institution, and we shall also be glad to receive payment on your pledge at a very early date.

Statements are being sent out, and should you not have received credit for all previous payments made on pledges, we will be glad to make any and all corrections upon presentation of your receipt.

If the subscribers prefer, we would be glad to have all amounts paid to this fund published in The Christian Sun. S. L. Beougher.

NO TIME FOR IT.

"Did you see that queer-looking old lady hunting for a book of poetry in the historical section?" Bernice asked the question of Alma as they left the public library together. "She was the oddest figure I've seen for ages."

"Why, no, I don't believe I noticed her," confessed Alma. "I was so absorbed in my own search for this book of travel that I had no eyes for anything else."

The book she had selected so painstakingly gave her a broadening knowledge of lands and far places that she did not know any other way. It opened to her mind gates of beauty and culture and pleasure that were closed to her in a physical sense. It gave her, in return for the few minutes spent in getting it and the few hours spent in reading it, rich treasure to keep and use for a lifetime. And while she selected her book, Bernice stood by, idle of hand and mind, poking fun at a poor, near-sighted old woman's mistake.

A clever writer suggests that we might all do well to be so busy about improving ourselves that we would have no time to criticise others.

Let's try that. Maybe we'll be surprised at the amount of improving that needs immediate attention. We may be a bit discouraged at the amount of time necessary to put into the work. But, never mind; let's go into it for all it's worth while we're at it. It's a good work. It's time well spent, and think how little it will leave for us for indulging in forbidden criticism of the other fellow.

Maybe, indeed, seeing the good results of our efforts, he will follow our example—and become above criticism!—Christian Vanguard.

JAPAN BARS JAZZ DANCING.

Kamakura, a Japanese summer resort, with its big American-style hotel, is said to be one of the gayest spots in Japan. Reports tell us that some Japanese patriotic strong-arm societies have taken some of the gayest out of Kamakura by ordering stopped the dancing of American jazz dances at the hotel.

These societies say that they are determined to stamp out Western dancing among the Japanese. They think that the style is immoral for the Japanese and a bad thing for the people. They do not want Japanese women to dance with foreigners, nor do they want Japanese young men to acquire fondness for the tango and other modern dances.

As a matter of fact, modern dancing should make us blush. Japan will not lose anything if such dances are banned there. It is well enough that Japan should be discriminating about what she accepts from the West. We have a plenty of good to give her, and most of us do not want to introduce our evil.—Ripple.

A SONG OF THE THANKFUL-TIME.

  Hear, little child in the light,
I am the fairy of growing things,
Plenty and gladness beneath my wings,
  I sing while the fire is bright.
I'll sing you a song of the Thankful-time,
So listen, dear drowsy, and hear my rhyme!
I am the fairy of warmth and light;
  I am the fairy of rain;
I am the spirit who watches true
In fog or shadow or sun or dew,
  Till the meadows grow ripe again;
Sing forever, in every clime,
My song of hope for the Thankful-time.
The trees in the orchard were red, little child,
  The meadows were gold with the wheat;
All the long summer I watched them grow,
Bringing them gladness in ways I know
  To make them most perfectly sweet.
Now they are yours, little child, little king,
With their sunshine, their goodness, their everything.
This was my part of the Thankful-time;
  I sing it, and go my way.
Dear little drowsy, before you sleep,
Here where the shadows are warm and deep,
  Look out to your stars and say:
"I am glad for home, I am glad for love,
I am glad for the wide, kind sky above,
I am glad for the plenty in any clime,
In my heart is the spirit of Thankful-time!"

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THIRD FINANCIAL GOAL OF MEN AND MILLIONS FORWARD MOVEMENT.

This was perhaps the most important financial goal, or section, of the movement. Previous to the movement, the Southern Christian Convention was raising from all regular sources for benevolences $25,000 per annum. This goal sought to double all regular contributions, making $125,000 of new money from this source. This money is just as much new money or funds as the individual Men and Millions pledges, taken during consecration week. If the movement had done nothing else but double our permanent income for benevolences, it deserves the praise of every member of the Church and the criticism of none.

We are now on the last lap of this financial goal. If we do our duty, we will raise $50,000 for the year 1924, making our total goal of $250,000 from regular sources, including Conference apportionments, Christian Missionary Association, Woman's Board and societies, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor, and for the Orphanage. Every one who contributes a cent to any of these organizations is a backer of and believer in the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The Conferences have met and the books are closed as to this subsection of the goal. The Christian Missionary Association of Eastern Virginia Conference has on a big campaign to increase its funds, and will close its books on December 2d next. The Woman's Board and societies have completed their five years. Superintendent Johnston closes the Orphanage account on December 31, 1924. The Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies can all help by taking the suggested offerings. Many Sunday Schools take them, but some do not. Now is the time to come to the aid of the Church.

If I could double my annual income within five years, I would think I had made a wonderful success. The Men and Millions Movement, under this third goal, has doubled the annual income of the Southern Christian Convention from regular benevolences, and still preachers and laymen are against the movement. They don't understand it. They have no conception of the vision which inspired the great love that animated the leaders who prosecuted the Men and Millions campaign, the magnitude and far-reaching effects of such a movement, and the results already accomplished.

Read THE CHRISTIAN SUN of last week. The results will astonish you; they will almost sweep you off your feet; they make you feel ashamed of yourself that you ever said anything against the movement. Objectors, please answer this question: "What movement or drive has ever doubled the permanent income of our Convention for benevolences within five years?" There is an end to the receipts from the other four financial goals, but these receipts come annually as long as time lasts or the Convention exists.

J. E. WEST,
Chairman Mission Board.

EVIDENCE AFTER SEVEN YEARS.

A dear good sister writes THE SUN's editor the following very significant words:

"You never said a truer thing than, 'Any Church can have a missionary society if there is one woman who really wants it.' I believe they were your words. You said that to me seven years ago. I thought you were wrong. I thought I was interested and wanted a society, but I know now it was periodical interest. It takes abiding interest to have a real society. Our president, Mrs. H., has that kind. She looks ahead, prepares good programs, and never forgets anything connected with the society. We are so fortunate to have the district leader with us. She, too, is a faithful worker. Our contribution compares most favorably with any of the best when you consider the strength of the Church. And seven years ago it seemed almost impossible to have a live society. Your remark at that time put me to thinking. I got others to thinking and working. May God grant you length of days and strength of body to carry on the great work in which you are engaged." MRS. N.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES REPORT.

Burlington Woman's Missionary Society.

The society went over the goal last year, and the coming year promises to be one of even greater success. Their goal for the year has been raised to a thousand dollars. Each circle expects to raise its proportional part. Circle No. 5 has raised $38.39 on their new year's work, and has quilted three quilts for the Orphanage.

Mountain work	$109.78
Thankoffering	43.50
Bible woman	50.00
Self-denial offering	30.90
Porto Rico Chapel	272.00
Conference goal	97.00
Life membership	30.00
Mite-boxes	64.49
Dues	122.15
		$ 819.82
Cradle roll mite-boxes and dues	$ 17.00
Incidentals	22.15
		39.15
Value of clothing and Christmas goods to mountain work	$ 56.07
Value of Christmas and thank-offering to Orphanage	136.98
Contributed for local work	58.29
		251.34
Grand total		$1,110.22

Present membership of the society is 108, and the society is divided into five circles.

The society has served supper monthly to the Martha Stacy Missionary Society in their monthly meetings, with the exception of July and August, this plan having begun in March, 1924.

Young People's Missionary Society.

Following is the report of the Young People's Missionary Society for 1923-'24, reported to the Woman's Conference at Reidsville, N. C., October 31, 1924:

Active members	36
Honorary members	8
New members for year	4
Goal for the year	$125.00
Amount raised	$202.34
Total received from mite-boxes	$ 50.20

Among the activities of this society are the holding of monthly business meetings and socials, the study of mission books, appointment of a flower committee and a visiting committee, and the circulation of mite-boxes.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION TO MEET.

The Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will hold its Thirty-third Annual Session on Tuesday, December 9th, with the Rosemont Christian Church, Rev. B. F. Black, pastor.

Naturally, as president of the association, the writer wishes the session to be a successful one financially. and one so peculiarly consecrated to the vital work intrusted to it that God's rich blessing and Christ's impelling spirit may be experienced and recognized throughout. But these hopes arise, too, from a far deeper interest and one that is common to us all; they arise from the desire that our association do effectively and graciously the part committed to it in the great work of the Kingdom. We would, therefore call attention to the following:

1st. If you are a member, or if you are responsible for the membership of an organization, see to it that your dues reach the association during the session. If you are not going to attend them, send the dues by someone who is, or mail your dues to either Mr. C. D. West, 120 26th Street, Newport News, Va., or Mr. B. D. Jones, R. F. D., Holland, Va.

2nd. Attend the session if you can.

3rd. Try to interest others in membership.

4th. Pray for the C. M. A.

5th. We wish to thank all who participated in the observation of C. M. A. Sunday the 16th. With incomplete reports as yet, and several of our churches not yet reached, over seventy new memberships have been secured. We also wish to apologise for every misunderstanding, embarrassment and disappointment growing out of the plans for the day.

For the C. M. A.,
J. H. LIGHTBOURNE, President.

TWO INSTITUTES.

MY DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

Please announce in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that Dr. W. H. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, superintendent of the Department of Christian Stewardship of the General Convention, will hold two one-day Christian stewardship institutes while in the South after attending the meeting of the Federal Council of Churches, in Atlanta, Ga.—at Wadley Christian Church, Wadley, Ala., December 10th, and at the Lanett Christian Church, Lanett, Ala., December 11, 1924.

These will be great meetings, and we solicit the attendance of all who can come, and especially do we urge the ministers of these two Southern Conferences to be present. This will be an opportunity of unsurpassing value, and one which will not be likely to come again in our short lifetime. So let us all make the most of it. Come! listen! heed! Very truly yours,

S. L. BEOUGHER.

MEN AND MILLIONS COLLECTIONS DURING OCTOBER.

The Men and Millions collections for October fell short of my expectations, but November has started off with a rush. Newport News has sent in a check and moved up to the 50 per cent column with Suffolk and others. It is wonderful how some of these missionary Churches, weak in financial means, come along with the old and established wealthy Churches when calls are made for benevolences.

How many other Churches will move up to the 50 per cent class between now and Christmas? "Move early and avoid the rush!"

J. E. WEST,
Chairman of Mission Board.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND THE NEAR EAST RELIEF.

By Charles V. Vickery Gen'l Sec'y.

The good people of the Christian Churches represented by The Christian Sun have been a most cheering constituency for the Near East Relief organization throughout the years when we, who are charged with this responsibility, have been seeking the aid of Christ's people for the least of His little ones—the orphans of martyred Armenia. Your General Convention, your State associations and your administrative boards, in true loyalty to your ideals of union among the followers of the Lord, have indorsed this compassionate philanthropy which so fully meets your ruling thought of joint ministry performed by the servants of Jesus without permitting minor differences in theology to divide their co-operation.

And now the indorsements and approbations of your boards renewed, we are looking to your fellowship of Churches for a new offering on Sunday, December 7th, which shall equal—or better still, outdo—the generous assistance that you have hitherto rendered for the care and upbringing of these children of affliction. Your faithful denominational committee, led by Mr. F. R. Beach, of Irvington, N. J., its resourceful and energetic chairman, has already spread through your congregations earnest reminders of what that day means to your people and to our organization. And although your denomination has chosen to emphasize that Sabbath by a plan somewhat different from the idea of Golden Rule Sunday which has been adopted for the same date in many communities, the coincidence of time will but add to the impression of this appeal when it is repeated by your pastors to their own congregations. What the community hears as a call to humanitarian sentiment, the Churches, we trust, will hear as a call to the neighbor spirit of Christianity in a missionary sense.

It is perhaps impossible to convey in this brief space how much this means to the Near East Relief enterprise. But any one who has studied from the Christian viewpoint the problems of these 40,000 children who are still dependent on us for food and shelter in Palestine, Syria, Greece and the Ararat country can easily foresee that we shall never rightly finish our obligation to them on any merely humanitarian basis; it is more and more apparent that the final stages of the work will be governed by purposes which only mission-spirited friends of Jesus Christ will understand. Already, by very reason of the care which the Near East has given to its orphan charges, they are less appealing emotionally to those whose charity rises and falls according to emotion than they were when, ragged, hungry and weak, they were gathering around our orphanage doors. But to those who regard children as potential champions for the kingdom of God in the next generation ahead, these once pitiful orphans are much more interesting today than they were then.

Now, as they develop toward and through the adolescent period, one can begin to see fascinating possibilities of individual force and social leadership shining through their personal traits. How shall that force and that leadership tell on their nation in their time? After the terrible slaughters which have reduced the Armenian race to a fragment of its former strength, these rescued orphans are self-evidently to be a dominating factor in Armenian life for the next fifty years. It is impossible then for men and women of vision to think of dismissing these wards of ours from our care until the most serious effort has been made to impress on them a character inclined to, and able for, a life career of Christ-like service in their people's behalf. Armenia will become a pagan name unless these young folks are trained to keep it Christian.

This is the reason why the recent Bronxville conference of religious leaders concerned for the future direction of Near East Relief gave such earnest attention to the educational problem which our work confronts. Education for livelihood, of course, our organization has already taken up, and with that we have made good progress. And also there has been preserved a strong religious atmosphere in all our homes—Christian patrons may be sure of that. But something more than that is now obviously needed.

A systematic plan for instruction in religious ideals and religious obligations must be laid out and diligently pursued with the object of registering in the conscience of these young people, before they join the active world outside their present institutional homes, the greatness of their responsibility for keeping Armenia Christian in name and making it more Christian in fact. Especially do we wish to give them individually a simple evangelical loyalty to the Lord Jesus which they will carry into the native Armenian Church. It is a great happiness to say that the Armenian patriarch and bishops wish the very same thing for the spiritualization of the national Church, and have already assured us of their readiness not only to approve but to aid our efforts.

But all this, as the men and women of the Christian denomination will readily appreciate, is an aim to which the interest of the general public cannot be invited, as it has been engaged for the shelter and feeding of these child-hosts. To save a child from death is everybody's concern. To prepare a child for a life of Christian usefulness is an objective for which only Church people can be relied on to co-operate. And that means that the remaining part of the Near East's program depends to a degree not paralleled in our previous experience upon the support of the Churches. May I not hope that every pastor of the Christian denomination, on the day which your Church authorities have set aside for this appeal (December 7th), will be at much pains to bring this new aspect of the Near East situation vividly to the consciousness of his parishioners. And even among the Sunday School children and young people, superintendents and teachers will certainly find it possible to make the situation concrete and actual by one simple question: "Do you want these Armenian orphans to have the same kind of training for life that you are getting here?" Undoubtedly, they do want that, and it is only right that they should have their chance to help as they are able.

IS YOUR HOUSE DILAPIDATED?

By Elizabeth Cole.

Woodrow Wilson, just before his death, said of somebody who was very ill: "He is all right, but the house he lives in is dilapidated and it looks as if he would soon have to move out." The man did move out. He died.

It is very strange how some of us will keep our lawns mowed, our hedges trimmed, our front-door knockers polished and our rooms clean and neat, yet we think we have not the time to take care of our bodies. We forget to drink water, we eat irregularly, hurriedly and the wrong food. Instead of taking physical exercise, we ride or sit, and the evenings seem so short we crowd them with amusement and fail to get sufficient sleep.

As a matter of fact, bodies are much more self-sufficient than houses. For some time they can go on functioning, outwardly appearing to be as one hundred per cent efficient, as the furnace, the electric lighting system or the vacuum cleaner that must be regularly inspected and kept in good order. Yet, how many of us get our hearts, lungs and digestive organs regularly inspected? The expert mechanic is called in to go over the gas range, clean and tone it up. Otherwise, it might go to pieces some fine day like the famous old "one-hoss shay," and where would the dinner be? We forget there is an expert physician (our own family doctor, or one at a free clinic), who is just as much an inspector of bodies as he is a curer of sicknesses when once we have gone to pieces.

Nowadays, doctors and other health workers wish to prevent sickness, and, through physical examinations periodically, do much toward decreasing not only the number of cases of such diseases as cancer, heart trouble, tuberculosis, but also the number of deaths from them.

How often we hear, "Oh, well, of course I'm dead tired, but I guess I can keep dragging around until my two weeks' vacation!" Just as if in two weeks of healthy living it were possible to catch up on the other fifty weeks of careless living! Every day should be lived as healthfully as those of the vacation. Then when finally the respite of two weeks arrives, or the month, or whatever our period of freedom from routine may be, we are prepared to enjoy this time as we rightfully should. There is not a feeling of exhaustion, and the holidays can be full of change, inspiration, fresh thoughts and new pleasures—real recreation.

To keep fit by knowing that our bodies are not being allowed to grow dilapidated is advocated by the National Tuberculosis Association. Healthy living 365 days of the year and periodic physical examinations, they believe, will help to prevent and control tuberculosis in this country. More tuberculosis clinics to care for the inspecting of bodies are needed, and the seventeenth annual Christmas Seal sale, to be held in December, will help to make them possible.

POUNDED.

On the 8th instant, we were invited to spend the night with Bro. E. P. Boroughs and family, of Shiloh Christian Church, as we thought, for the purpose of making up a box for the Christian Orphanage. About 7 o'clock the cars began to come in, and in a little while the large reception room was filled to overflowing with neighbors and friends. After all had become quiet, I thought it was time for me to make a speech, but one brother, "We will hear from you later on." So Bros. J. E. Stout and B. S. Moffitt placed a large library table in the center of the room. Then the people began to go out, and soon returned with boxes, packages and sacks and placed them on and under the table.

Bro. J. E. Stout said, "This is just a little pounding for you." We tried to thank the good people of Shiloh for their kind remembrance of us on this occasion as well as at other times and places.

The Church at Shiloh is very thoughtful of her preachers. May the Good Lord bless them in all their efforts to extend His kingdom.

Praise and thanksgiving are assigned a place of great prominence in the Word of God. The psalms abound in exclamations of praise and thanksgiving. The life that is always keyed to the note of praise is more powerful in its influence upon others and is the most loved among men.—Christian Observer.

Lesson X—December 7, 1924.

The Man Born Blind.

Golden Text: "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."—John 9:25.

Lesson: John 9:1-41.

Devotional Reading: Rev. 19:1-8.

Reference Material: Matt. 5:10-16.

Here was a man born blind. He had never been able to see God's Word. He had never seen the faces of his loved ones and friends—God's children. All his life had been lived in that prison of darkness which comes from blindness. And as if this were not enough, he was poor. Even now, grim poverty had driven him to beg on the streets. There he was, an object to all.

To the disciples, he was an object of theological discussion. They were steeped in the old idea that all suffering was a punishment for sin, and they wanted to know who did the sin—the man or his parents. Their concern was to fix the guilt and not to help the sufferer. They were not much different from the priest and the Levite of the last lesson, who passed by on the other side. And their species is not extinct. There are many today who are more concerned with "seeing the slums" or with placing the blame than with remedying conditions and helping the needy.

But even at that, the disciples were better than the scribes and Pharisees, for the man was not an object at all to them—that is, at first. They had probably passed him by, time and again, even when he sat before the temple, without paying him any attention. They belong to that class who in the comfort of their homes and in the luxury of their lives of ease, never see human need, even though it is at their very door.

To Jesus, however, the man was an object of compassion and a challenge to living service. He saw in the man's extremity God's opportunity. And He proceedeth forthwith to work the works of God on the man. He made clay, touched it to the man's eyes, and sent him to the pool of Siloam to wash. And when the man obeyed, a miracle took place—he came seeing. For the first time in his life he saw the sunlight and the flowers and loved ones and friends. It would seem that it would be an occasion for rejoicing by all. It should have been, to say the least.

But it was not. For the neighbors, it was a time for idle curiosity and speculation; for accusation, and even for excommunication. And, worst of all, for the parents it was an occasion for what amounted to denial of all parental responsibility. And in every case, the people involved were supposed to be religious. These people were living in a far country from that which finds its ideal in the words, "Hereby shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one toward another."

It is significant that the Master found the man after he had been "cast out," or excommunicated. Men may mark a man's name off the Church roll, and they may refuse to fellowship with him; but only the man himself can shut himself off from Christ. He is the friend of publicans and sinners—and even outcasts.

There are a number of interesting sidelights on the lesson, but there are three very vital truths in connection with the blind man's action that deserve special mention and at the risk of using too much space in these columns I want to present them briefly. They are as follows:

First, the man followed the light that he had; he did what he was told to do. Jesus did not give the man his sight at once. He annointed his eyes with clay and told Him to go wash. The blind man wanted his sight. He wanted that above all other things. And, putting clay on one's eyes, seemed like such a trivial thing. But he did what he was told; he followed the light he had. And because he did this, he got more light—he came out into the full light and truth. There is a lesson here for us. The way to get more light is to be true to the light we already have. In the final analysis, men's problems are not intellectual—they are moral. And he who wills to do the best he knows, will know better.

In the second place, the man appealed to his own personal experience. He did not know much theologically, but he did know a great deal experimentally. And, although he could not explain how the man or "the prophet" had done the miracle, he did know that he had done it. In this day of controversy and heated discussion, we will do well to learn of this blind man. The vital thing is to have the experience of Christ. If we have that, we may differ in our interpretations of theological problems. The essential thing for us is to know this: that, whereas we were blind, now we see.

And finally, the man had no difficulty in seeing in Jesus the Son of God after he had seen His works and experienced them in his own life. God, who, in times past and in divers ways, performed His mighty works and wonders, still lives. And one has only to look at His continued activity in life—in lives right around us—to know that, in truth, this is the Son of God. Better still, one has only to experience God in His own life to know that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God.

Teaching Points.

1. Undue attention to the forms of religion may blind one to the demands of religion.

2. Suffering is not always punishment for sin; it may be a refining process in character.

3. Human need constitutes a challenge to service, and not merely a subject for discussion.

4. Jesus used material things for higher purposes.

5. Jesus always emphasized the personal touch.

6. People may see with their eyes and still be blind.

7. The needs of human life transcend the details of Sabbath observance.

8. One of the best arguments for Christianity is the man who has become a Christian.

9. Spiritual eyesight depends largely upon heart health.

10. If Jesus Christ were not the Son of God, how account for His life and works?

11. The noncommittal people are often intolerable.

12. Personal experience far outweighs formal argument.

13. Outcasts have a claim upon us.

14. Physical healing is a means to an end.

15. Refusal to obey the truth blinds to the truth.

16. The Master's touch opens up a new world.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

December 7, 1924.

Subject: "Jesus and Forgiveness." (Consecration Meeting.)

Golden Text: "If ye forgive not . . . neither will your Father forgive."—Matt. 6:15.

Daily Readings: M., Dec. 1—Luke 7:40-50, Forgiveness by grace. T., Dec. 2—Matt. 26:28, Forgiveness by blood. W., Dec. 3—Luke 24:25-48, Forgiveness through Christ. T., Dec. 4—Matt. 6:9-15, Duty to forgive. F., Dec. 5—Luke 17:1-4, Unlimited forgiveness. S., Dec. 6—John 20:19-23, Forgiveness in His name. S., Dec. 7—Matt. 6:14, What Jesus said about forgiveness.

If we are to follow in the steps of Jesus, we must learn the supreme lesson of forgiveness that He gave to the world through His message and His life. Among the first of His works and sayings He taught forgiveness, and among His last deeds were prayers for the forgiveness of His enemies who had crucified Him. On one occasion when one disciple had practiced the act of forgiveness and was boasting of the fact, thinking he had gone to the limit, Jesus rebuked him and said there was no number limit on forgiveness, and that we should forgive not seven, but seventy times seven.

In the model prayer which Jesus gave to the world we have a pure example of equality of forgiveness. "Forgive us our debts, even as we forgive our debtors—." Without the power of forgiveness on the part of those with whom we come into contact daily, ours would be an unhappy world. Without the mercy and forgiveness which our Father offers through Jesus, we would be an unhappy and miserable people.

"Teach me to hide that fault I see; that mercy I to others show, that mercy show to me."

HOW MISSING LINKS ARE MADE.

can Museum of Natural History, and "author of the tremendous illustrations served up to hundreds of thousands of children annually," would say now, in view of the "reconstruction of Mr. 'Piltdown Man' "? Would he still stand by the side of an "ape-man," and pointing to him, say, as formerly, "There he stands before us in all his primeval shagginess, grasping his heavy wooden spear in the moonlight—he thrills us. This is our ancestor; this is the creature from whom we evolved; this thing is bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. We are stirred by his passions, urged on by his nameless instincts. Forty thousand years separate us from him. But millions of years separate him from still lower animals. He stands close to us—this cunning, fighting, hunting, ferocious, Neanderthal man." Would he, think you, in the face of all this evidence?

Is it any wonder, in view of these facts, that so eminent a scientist as Hrdlicka urges "that none of the conclusions regarding the 'Piltdown Man' should be accepted, and that all hypotheses relating to it must be regarded as more or less premature?" In like manner, Sir Ray Lancaster, the eminent English scientist, denies Dawson's and Woodward's claims regarding the "ape-man," asserting that the jaw and the skull had never belonged to the same creature. Indeed, Prof. David Waterston, of the University of London, King's College (in an article in Nature, November 13, 1913, p. 319), maintains that "to refer the jawbone and cranium of the 'Piltdown' remains to the same individual would be exactly equivalent to articulating a chimpanzee's foot with the bones of a human thigh and leg."

So it comes to pass that that apish human-like creature in that glass case is not the gentleman he is said to be at all. He is a hoax. He is a fraud —proved so by sound, scientific authority. No such being, "missing link," "progenitor," ever existed. This is what the consensus of scientific opinion tells us. And this is what the pupils in our educational institutions ought to be told. Why should the wool be pulled over their eyes and their trusting hearts and receptive minds be deceived? Why should teachers continue to tell pupils that that creature in the glass case is our "progenitor" "according to the latest, most fully established and unanimous testimony of science." That is a deliberate lie. If the teachers do not know about that fraud in that glass case, they ought to know about it, or they are not competent to instruct our children along such lines. If they do not know the truth, they should be forbidden to teach a lie. If they know the "latest results of scientific opinion" regarding that fellow in that glass case, why then do they not instruct the children accordingly? What purpose have they in deliberately withholding such information from their pupils? True science is never afraid of truth. It deals with facts and is not, or should not be, afraid to face them. That fraud, hoax, hypocrite in the glass case is not a "half-way" man at all. He ought to be shown the door with instructions never to show his manufactured face again. It is surely no credit to any educational system to hide truth. And, if it is true, as reported, that teachers in New York City are still instructing pupils under their charge that this hoax and fraud in the glass case is a true specimen of what we have come through to our present point of attainment, then one may well ask, What does New York expect to gain by such willful deception and by the practice of such deceit upon its growing youth?

That thing in the glass case is not "a missing link." It is a most contemptible fraud, a shameful hoax perpetrated upon an unsuspecting public—a public that has a right to expect better things from its educators. It should be announced from the housetops that it is not true "that the case of evolution has been settled for all time," or "that man's monkey origin has been accepted by all the foremost thinkers of the world," or "that crystalized public opinion has passed favorable judgment upon it." All this is not true. With the Legislature of Kentucky voting, forty against and forty-one in favor of the teaching of Darwinism in the public schools, it is certain that the question is by no means a "settled" one; nor is it one that can in any way be looked upon as "accepted" or "passed upon favorably by the public." The fight is on—and on more fiercely than ever. Darwinism is challenged—and, many would say, doomed. It must square itself with facts; it must give an account of itself or forever remain unscientific and silent. Prof. Bateson, than whom there is perhape no more eminent scientist living, declared, in his presidential address to the British Association, Sydney, in 1914, "that Darwin's theory no longer could be accepted by scientific men. To us, he (Darwin) speaks no more with philosophic authority. We read his scheme of evolution as we would those of Lucretius and Lamarck."

Strange as it may seem, yet one hears it on every hand, the theologians are more reluctant to let go of the Darwinian theory than are scientists. It is said that two presiding heads of leading theological institutions sent letters to the Kentucky Legislature when it was discussing the question of continuing the teaching of Darwinism in the schools and institutions of that State earnestly advising them not to forbid such teaching. Can you understand what is the matter with some theologians? Why should they be the contenders for the overthrow of what is considered the orthodox or biblical view of the creation of man as set forth in Genesis? Why should the scientist be able to say of the theologian that he does not know enough to know when a thing is worn out and discarded?

Let me close by quoting the words of Europe's most noted pathologist and anthropologist, Prof. Rudolf Virchow, delivered at the twentieth century congress of the Anthropological Association. He said: "An hypothesis may be discussed, but its significance can be established only by producing actual proofs in its favor, either by experiment or direct observation. This Darwinism has not yet succeeded in doing. In vain have its adherents sought for connecting links which should connect man with the monkey. Not a single one has been found. This so-called 'proanthropos' which is supposed to represent this connecting link has not yet appeared. No true scientist claims to have seen him. The man-ape has no existence, and the missing link remains a phantom."

Wheaton, Ill.

There ought to be a thanksgiving for hopes for the future. Things may not be just right today. We may be bearing a burden that is heavy and full of toil and we may be lonesome for those who once walked with us down the path of the years, but we have a hope that is big with immortality, we are going to meet our lost ones, we are going to enter into the fadeless glories of God's eternal land, we are going to see Him face to face.—Methodist Protestant.

The man who thinks it foolish to talk about faith in God will mount a train in the pitch darkness and trust his life to an engineer because he has faith in him. Mostly, he has never seen that engineer. He has faith in an unseen engineer, but counts it foolish to have faith in an invisible God.

MONDAY.

HYPOCRISY.

"This people honoreth me with their lips; but their heart is far from me."

You probably know that you are not all that you ought to be or what most of your friends think you are. If you should show the world the sort you are at heart, you would lose immediately the good standing which you have now.

Still, you go on making no efforts at improvement, but continue a course which you must keep concealed or lose your best friends. It ought to be a lot of comfort and satisfaction to you to be all that you pretend to be. Do you think it worth the effort?

Surely, you are not willing to say that you are too weak morally or mentally to make the effort to improve! How much more those in your home would enjoy life if you were true! How much more your friends would appreciate you if investigations came and you were found honest, loyal and pure in your inner life!

You cannot tell what slight misstep on your part may lead to something which will expose you in your present true colors, and it should make you crings to think of the fine scorn the mention of your name would make, if you were found out. (Copyright, 1924, Internatoinal Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—Oh, Lord, save us from hypocrisy, and make us true, sincere and loyal to Thee, to our fellow-men and to ourselves. In His name we ask it. Amen.

TUESDAY.

SELF-CENTERED OR CHRIST-CENTERED.

"He must increase, I must decrease."—John 3:30-36.

John gives us the method of rising in the scale of being from a self-centered to a Christ-centered life. Increasing Jesus Christ is Christianity in all its transforming and transmuting glory. Increasing self is the philosophy of humanism in all its tragedy of selfishness and indifference to the world's need of ministry and service. We are hearing much discussion about this theory of life called "humanism." It is supposed to be a new cult, but it is not new. On the contrary, it may be regarded as the old paganism redisguised, as old sin appearing in new dress. It would teach us to be true to ourselves. The only way to be true to self, to express life in the highest and most dignified terms, is to be true to Jesus Christ, which is another way of saying that we must be true to our fellow-men and serve them with a Christ-like spirit of purpose and endeavor.

Humanism twists the doctrine of truth by saying we must follow our own inclinations. It tells us to do as we please, to follow the path of least resistance and ignore all external authority. Daily, the temptation comes to us all to "go roundabout," rather than to "go through." Even Christ pleased not Himself. He served others. He forgot self. He did good. All the best in civilization is derived from Christ-centered lives, which express themselves, not in what the world bestows upon them, but by their gifts to a needy world.—Rev. Richard Braunstein.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

COMMUNION WITH GOD.

"Stand in awe, and sin not; commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still.—Psa. 4:4.

Man is different from all other animals. God has made him to have dominion over the other things of earth. He is a little lower than the angels, and capable of communion with his Creator. Many people say prayers, but only a few really pray. Prayer is communion with the Father of all spirits. Saying prayers may be an intellectual process or the repeating of certain sentences, communion is of the spirit and by the spirit. Communion affects the human heart. Like the radio, which must be in perfect harmony or in tune, so man's heart must be in harmony, or his spirit must be in tune with Him who has declared that "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

Prayer.—O God, help my spirit to so loose itself in Thy spirit that I may be unmindful of any other presence save Thine. For Jesus' sake. Amen.—B. J. Earp.

THURSDAY.

THE PRAYER THAT PREVAILS.

"I besought the Lord thrice."—2 Cor. 12:8, 9.

"When prayer is not answered, continue to pray." This was the advice of a woman whose personal experience was behind what she said. For many years this servant of God continued in prayer. Her son was twenty-one when she saw him come reeling home at midnight after a carousal with other profligates. Two years later he fled from home in disgrace. She did not see him again until his reformation.

Up in New York State, this mother, by dint of long hours at her sewing machine, contrived to keep the home in which he had been born. Sixteen years after the son had left her, there came word that he was in New York, a derelict on the Bowery. She never would tell the incident (but her son did) of how she went to the metropolis and searched for three days, hoping to see her boy. She passed him on the Bowery, but did not recognize her son in the bewhiskered and broken beggar. Seeing and recognizing her, he, ashamed of his plight, let her pass, although he knew why she was there.

Back to her sewing and prayers she went. When he was forty years of age, there came a telegram: "God found me tonight." He had been converted in a mission.

"When there is no answer to our prayers, we should continue to pray," said the old woman. "Paul prayed about the thorn in his flesh until God gave some answer. If we follow the teaching of Jesus, we will continue in prayer. God has an answer for every earnest petition."—Rev. John Harrison Allen.

Prayer.—That we may learn to pray to our Heavenly Father in full confidence that He will hear and do what is best for us.

FRIDAY.

"For a man's life consisted not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—Luke 12:15.

Jesus is speaking to an innumerable multitude. He has just said, "Beware of covetousness." No doubt, He thought while He had such a vast audience He would be most effective by choosing a text that would be applicable to the largest per cent of His hearers. He illustrates His sermon by a rich fool who had coveted so long and largely until he thought his soul could feed on the materials he had gathered in. "Soul . . . eat, drink, and be merry." Paul, the "as touching the law blameless" young Pharisee, read, "Thou shalt not covet" (see Rom. 7:7), and a lane of light came upon the words showing him his own sinfulness in mere doing things, so that he cries out "O wretched man that I am!" Jesus placed man's wealth within.

Prayer.—O Lord, grant that our hearts may be big enough for the indwelling of Thy Spirit, kind enough to take in all our fellows, and pure enough to love unselfishly. Keep us from covetousness, O God. Amen.—John G. Truitt.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S FAVORITES.

"Of His own will He brought us forth, with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of first fruits of his creatures."—Jas. 1:16-19.

His children are His choice. It was the Jewish custom to offer the first and best fruits on the altar. This consisted of every kind of produce, natural and prepared. Seconds were condemned, and he who offered seconds was rejected. Example: note Cain's offering. Recall also the widow's mite. We are reminded of Paul's injunction, "If the 'first fruits' is holy, so is the lump. If the root is holy, so is the tree."

How good the doing of things that take first place and win commendation!

Who are the 144,000 before the Lord (Rev. 14:4-5)? They are they, . . . purchased among men to be the first fruits of God.

Prayer.—Our Father, inspire us to live so that others seeing us may know that we are soundly of sterling character for Christ. In His name we ask it. Amen.

SUNDAY.

THE SPIRIT FOR THE SABBATH.

"I was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day."—Rev. 1:10.

The Lord's Day is a remembrance of the risen Lord, and as such is a direct testimony of the greatest fact of the Bible—the resurrection; and to one of the chief doctrines of our faith—Christ's divinity.

If this were not so, Christianity would have no foundation, forgiveness no security, and faith would be vain, we would yet be in our sins and without God and hope.

Christ kept the Sabbath as a matter of personal loyalty to it and to His Father. The apostles kept it as loyalty to Him, and it is our way of showing love and worship to Him.

What is our attitude? Do we keep it in memory of Him who gave Himself for us? We keep our friend's birthday and send messages and gifts. We often wish for some way of showing Him that we love Him and of letting Him know we are His. Here is a way. Keep the day of His spirit.

Prayer.—Our Father, bring to our souls the calm of paradise, and forbid that we shall forget Christ, our Saviour, to live his spirit on the Sabbath Day. In His name we ask it. Amen.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEARS:

I promised to tell you something that happened to your editor. So here it is, all ready to tell, if all the Kiddies are listening—are you? Oh, now be very, very careful not to cry at all till you get through reading it, every word; then I just know each one will feel happy, even if you do want to cry at first.

Well, one night, not so long ago, your editor drove that little Ford right up close to the Church door, locked it all up, and put it to sleep for a while till your editor could go to junior choir and prayer meeting. And—what do you think, Kiddies? Along about 9 o'clock, when we came out and started home, the little Ford was gone! Yes, all gone away! It had waked up, and some man who wasn't good—because no one could be good who would steal—that somebody had taken the little Ford and left your editor without anything 'cept the little Ford's key. Yes, without any insurance, either—just the little key, that was all. And we never have found the little Ford's new home yet, and I know it would enjoy its own, its very own garage, where Mother Winkie and Teeny live, don't you?

Now, wait though! Along came some beautiful, kind ladies, and they just walked around, and walked around; and as they walked around they met some more kind, kind people, and they gave your editor a gift—and it wasn't Christmas at all! And pretty soon, when your editor can, she is going to take this gift and get another little Ford, so she can ride all around and see the Kiddies.

If ever you see the little Ford that ran away, just turn it around and send it home as fast as it can come. We are lonesome for each other—the little Ford and I. Are you glad you know about how it all happened? I knew you would, for you are such dear, dear Kiddies.

Good-by now. Your loving editor,

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

LETTER FROM A "KIDDIE."

November 14, 1924.

DEAR EDITOR:

This is my first letter. I hope you will like it well enough to publish it. My grandmother lives with us, and takes THE CHRISTIAN SUN. She reads to us out of THE SUN sometimes about the children, and I enjoy it very much. So I thought I would write a letter for the Kiddies' Corner. She read us the story about "Old Witch Neda," and I liked it fine. I am a little girl, ten years old, and I like to read stories about children. I hope there will be a good one in THE SUN next week.

I get books from our library sometimes, but they are not always what I like. I go to school, and help my mother do her housework. I have two little brothers and one little sister. My oldest brother is seven, and the other one is four, and my sister two, and I think she is mighty cute. She is just learning to talk. She wants to go to school with me and every where I go. I will be glad when she gets to be a big girl, for I think it is nice to have a sister to go to Sunday School and other places.

So, good-night.

Your little Kiddie,

Columbus, Ga. EDNA BROWN.

THANKSGIVING STORY.

Long, long ago, there lived over in Holland some good people who loved to do as they pleased about going to Church. The old king was cruel to them, and made them do lots of things they didn't like to do—and that was not right to do, either.

One day they hired a ship and told the Dutch people good-by, and away they sailed across the water to England. But, do you know, the king in England wanted these good people to go to his Church, and they didn't believe all the things were right in the king's Church. These people believed in God, and wanted to worship God in the right way.

After a long, long time, they were able to hire two big ships. They knew that away across the ocean there was a land called America, where no one lived except Indians, and to this land they sailed in their two ships. You know what the ships were named, do you not? Such pretty names, too—"The Mayflower" was one, and "The Speedwell" was the other.

The Pilgrims—for that was the name of these good people—suffered many, many hardships on their ocean voyage, and many of them died. But after a long time they came to the America they had heard so much about. They found only Indians living here, and the Indians were so good to the Pilgrims that after they had been over here a year, living in their log cabins, they invited the Indians to a party. This party was called a Thanksgiving party, and do you know it lasted three days? Yes, indeed! The Pilgrims loved the land they now called home, and God had blessed them so much that they were glad to hold a real Thanksgiving feast and thank God in this way for all their good things.

That was more than three hundred years ago. And still we have Thanksgiving the same as our Pilgrim fathers.

Now, can you tell why?

THE WHITE FUR COATS.

One winter morning, Bennie and Bunny woke up and found their nice white fur coats beside their beds.

"Oh, goody!" exclaimed Bennie; "there must be snow in the woods, else mother would not have put out our white fur coats."

Up jumped Bunny and looked out of the window, and sure enough there was snow all over the ground. It did not take them long to dress and eat their breakfast, for they could think of nothing else but the fun they would have playing in the snow.

"Now, children," said Mrs. Rabbit, "don't let me catch you throwing snowballs at any one. If you do, into the house you come and put on your gray coats again."

Of course, that meant that they could not go out-of-doors while the snow lasted, for no rabbit would think of going out while the snow was on the ground with a gray coat on, because the hunters could see them so plainly. Benny and Bunny Rabbit intended to obey their mother, and so they promised to throw snowballs only at the trees and rocks, and for a while all went well.

They made a pile of snowballs and a wall of snow, and back and forth they threw the snowballs at each other, dodging behind their white walls; and then Bennie espied Mr. Jack Rabbit and his wife, and Jackie, their son, all dressed up in their Sunday best clothes going out for a walk. Jackie Rabbit had on his white fur coat, but on his head he wore a high hat, with a feather stuck in the band on one side. Jackie felt very proud, and as he went past Bennie and Bunny he tossed his head proudly and strutted along.

This was too much for Bennie and Bunny. They rose up from behind their snow walls and threw a hard snowball right at Jackie Rabbit's high hat.

"Bang! bang!" and off went the hat on the ground. Jackie turned around, and two more snowballs struck him—this time right in the face. My! how he did scream with rage, and out came Mrs. Rabbit to see what it was all abount.

"Benny and Bunny snowballed me!" howled Jackie.

"He is a proud-cat rabbit, and he made faces at us," said Bennie and Bunny.

"You come right into this house and take off your white coats," said Mrs. Rabbit.

Mrs. Jack Rabbit and her husband went to Mrs. Rabbit's door. "I don't think your children were all to blame," said Mrs. Jack. "Jackie did toss his head, and he is altogether too proud, I am sure. What are you going to do to punish your children, Mrs. Rabbit?"

"They have got to take off their white fur coats and put on their gray ones," replied Mrs. Rabbit.

"I think that would be a good punishment for Jackie, too," said Mrs. Jack Rabbit. "He won't be so proud another year if he has to wear his old coat all winter. Come right home with me and take off your white coat and hat, Jackie."

Oh, how Jackie did cry, and how Bennie and Bunny cried, too! But their mothers were firm, and off came the white fur coats and on went the old gray ones again. 'Most all of the winter they had to stay in the house and look out at the snow. Only once in a while after sunset could they run in the woods; and if, some day, you should happen to see a little rabbit in the woods when the snow is on the ground, with a gray coat on, you may be pretty sure it is Bennie or Bunny or Jackie Rabbit. And if it should be neither of those three, you may be sure it is some little rabbit who is wearing his old coat because his mother has taken away his white one for punishment.

THE WIND.

Oh, Daddy! make me a kite; please do!
Use old newspapers, and lots of glue;
I'll get some sticks from the house next-door,
And we'll get busy right here on the floor!

Oh, say! we're going to have lots of fun,
A-flying our kites till they reach the sun;
And when they whirl round, and round, and round,
We'll put in the string till they hit the ground.

Oh! what do we care for the wind that blows,
And flips and flutters and tears our clothes;
Just let it blow, till our kites on high
Sail round, and round, in the big blue sky.

(Age 12.) MATTIE T. KOERNER.

HAMMER AND ANVIL.

Last eve I passed beside a blacksmith's door
And heard the anvil ring the vesper chime;
When looking in, I saw upon the floor
Old hammers worn with beating years of time.

"How many anvils have you had," said I,
"To wear and batter all these hammers so?"
"Just one," said he; then said with twinkling eye,
"The anvil wears the hammers out, you know."

And so, I thought, the anvil of God's Word
For ages skeptic blows have beat upon;
Yet, though the noise of falling blows was heard,
The anvil is unharmed—the hammers gone.

—Dr. John Clifford.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

When you read this letter it will be near Thanksgiving Day. I am wondering if when you sit down at your Thanksgiving dinner if you will think of the one hundred and nine little fatherless children at the Christian Orphanage—your Orphanage—and wish for them to have a good dinner and be happy on that occasion. Then ask yourself the question, "Have I done anything to bring happiness to them or to add joy to their little lives?" They, too, will be hungry and wish for a good dinner on this another Thanksgiving Day.

The helplessness of an orphan child should appeal to every one. "Only the heart in which the Master does not dwell is untouched by this appeal." The Master was always very tender toward little children, and the orphan and fatherless are mentioned in the Bible more than thirty-two times, showing that God's love and care is round and about them, and He expects His children to serve Him by administering to His orphans. Your Orphanage needs your help at this Thanksgiving season. The cold and chilly winter months are upon us, the needs will be many. The sacrifice to supply these needs should be sweet. Will you accept a part by making your Thanksgiving offering liberal this year?

ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE.

How frequently the expression "almost impossible" is used in connection with religious work. It is a well-known phrase around Sunday School conventions, teachers' meetings, Church courts, and so forth. The word possible is associated with divine action. The qualification "almost" gives the human reaction. Men trap themselves by suggesting deadlocks.

There is a big difference between impossible and "almost possible." What a lot of things have looked "almost impossible" and yet have been worked out. The Alps were crossed in this way by armies; railroads have gone through some "impossible" passes. The "almost" leaves a loophole for the right kind of man or group to push through. The "almost impossible" is a challenge to faith, skill, genius, and courage. It is a term, too, of our own making. Faith, we are wont to sing, "laughs at impossibilities." The early disciples of Jesus were given the "impossible" to do. They were schooled in the doctrine that all things are possible to him that believeth, and "all things are possible with God."—Exchange.

One of the wonders of the Bible is that it finds a man where he lives and speaks to him there. Its universality is found in this. The black man and the white man and the brown man and the yellow man are at heart the same, and the great events of life are largely the same in each of them. They love and hate, and laugh and cry. They are fathers and lovers and seekers after gold, and seekers after God. Because through them all flow the tides of an universal life and passion, the universal Book makes its appeal to all.—Methodist Protestant.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

The following are resolutions in memory of L. T. Rudd, who died October 20, 1924:

Whereas, God, in His all-wise providence, has seen fit to take to his eternal reward our friend and brother L. T. Rudd; be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to Him who doeth all things well.

2. That the Church has lost a faithful member, the wife a devoted husband, the children a loving father, and the mother a loyal son.

3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to the sorrowing ones, and we urge them to look to Him, who alone can comfort us in sorrow.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, a copy sent The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy placed on the Church record.

BLANCHARD.

Elizabeth Jane Blanchard was born February 18, 1837, and died November 9, 1924, aged 87 years, 8 months and 22 days. In early life, "Aunt Jane," as she was familiarly known, united with New Providence Christian Church, Graham, N. C., but some fifty years ago transferred her membership to Union Christian Church, of which she was a member at death. One brother and two sisters survive her.

"Aunt Jane" was one of those quiet and peaceful souls who served her day and generation well without much ado. The funeral services were from Union Christian Church, conducted by the writer, and her body was laid to rest in the Church cemetery.

Sweet be her sleep till Jesus bids her arise on the resurrection morning.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Power by Wireless.—

Thomas A. Edison recently made the statement that electric light and power transmission by wireless is surely coming in the future; however, he said that there was no cause to believe that it is immediately at hand.

Swords Into Plowshares.—

Mr. Mark Eben Cheney, of Jamestown, N. Y., an eighty-four-year-old veteran of the Civil War, literally beat an old Revolutionary War sword, carried by his grandfather, into a plowshare. He also turned over the blade of an old lancer's spear into a very satisfactory pruning hook.

Eastman Goes to "Christian Work."—

The Christian Work, a religious weekly published in New York City, is very fortunate in securing Rev. Fred Eastman as managing editor. He has had much experience in the field of journalism, and his zeal and activity will be a great addition to the strength of the paper which has already attained a high place under the editorship of Dr. Frederick Lynch.

Methodists Cut Foreign Missions.—

The Methodist Board of Foreign Missions, at its Pittsburgh meeting, cut the foreign mission work of the Church 35 per cent. The cut was made necessary by the tremendous falling off of the gifts of the Church. The bishops will inaugurate a campaign to raise three million dollars to take care of a debt now weighing down the board. The mission work cannot be increased to the standard set by the centenary movement until this debt is paid, the board declares.

A Great Program.—

The quadrennial session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will meet December 3d to 9th in Atlanta, Ga. Its program promises to be a most interesting one.

Dr. W. P. Minton, Dr. W. H. Dennison, and Dr. W. W. Staley will be in attendance at the meeting, and will come to Wadley from Atlanta for a one-day institute on missions and stewardship. This institute will, or ought to, mean much to our Southern Conferences. It is hoped that many of our ministers and laymen will find it possible to attend this institute at Wadley, Ala., on December 10th.

Presbyterians Looking Toward Union.—

The departments of Church co-operation and union of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church have shown a desire to formulate various proposals for union at recent meetings. On November 22d a subcommittee was formed to continue the discussions of union with the Congregational Church which was first begun by the presbytery of Cleveland. Informal conferences have also been held with representatives of the commission on union of the Protestant Episcopal Church anticipating the world conference on faith and order which is to be held in 1927. These movements are being cautiously made, but they are steps in a direction which makes one hopeful.

Butler to Fill Vacancy.—

Mr. William M. Butler has been appointed by Governor Cox, of Massachusetts, to fill the vacancy left by the death of Henry Cabot Lodge. His appointment has been challenged by many Democrats in Massachusetts, but under the existing law, Mr. Butler will probably occupy a seat in the Senate until the general election of 1926. The advent of Mr. Butler into the political arena as chairman of the Republican National Committee and field general of Mr. Coolidge was greeted with doubt from many quarters. The overwhelming success of his management has shown that the "amateur," as some have called him, is a wise and capable leader. The seat in the Senate, however, will call for a high order of statesmanship not required by a political manager. His position in the party will give him far more importance in the Senate than newcomers to that body usually enjoy. There is little likelihood of a special session after March 4th, so the country may have to wait a year to see two most interesting figures in action in the Senate—Mr. Butler on the floor, and Mr. Dawes in the chair.

The Churchman Speaks.—

The Churchman, Episcopal weekly, when requested to define its position by another periodical of the same deonmination, states unhesitatingly that it wants to see some "unsafe" men made bishops in that Church. It explains the term "unsafe" by saying: "The Church needs unsafe men, as she has always needed them—men as unsafe as St. Paul, who planted dynamite under a "safe" Jewish-Christian conception of Christ's teaching; as unsafe as St. Francis of Assisi, who threatened the whole mechanized system of the Christian Church by his daring and unconventional ministry to those in lowly places; as unsafe as Savonarola, who flayed the politicians of his day with the merciless love of the gospel of Christ; as unsafe as Pasteur, the results of whose researches, when revealed in the laboratory, and through him to the world, set against him almost every member of his own profession; as unsafe as Copernicus, who wrought a revolution in the world's conception of the universe; as unsafe as Maurice and Kingsley and Rauschenbusch and Bishop Charles Williams, who dared to say that the world had something yet to learn from Christianity for the field of social justice—men as unsafe, in fact, as every man who has suffered a sense of dissatisfaction with the status quo and who has believed that God's revelation to man was not completed by sundown on any day in the past. The method of electing bishops in the American Church does not tend, unfortunately, toward the selection of the type of unsafe men of which we have been writing. Year after year diocesan conventions elect men to the episcopate who are known as compromise candidates. And compromise candidates are not usually the type of men who have stirred the imagination of the world or have disturbed the smug and destructive satisfaction with things as they are."

The Country Church Discussed.—

Three hundred representatives of various kinds of rural organizations gathered at Columbus, Ohio, in the seventh annual meeting of the American Country Life Association. There was no set program, and the discussion centered itself on the country Church problem. Some held that the Church was a divisive factor in rural life, and declared that the preachers were sowers of hate instead of love; but a large majority agreed that the Church was absolutely essential to the proper development of country life. Competition was bitterly attacked, and the Methodists attending the conference drafted resolutions requesting the bishops and superintendents of that Church to co-operate in eliminating this competition. It was pointed out that there were in America 101,000 country Churches, and that on no given Sunday in the year would more than fifty thousand of them be open for service; that only one person out of every five living in rural districts attended any Church; that seven out of every ten rural Churches must content themselves with a fraction of a minister; that one-third of the rural ministers, in part or in whole, supported themselves by some other occupation other than the ministry, and that one-seventh of all our country and town places have no Church at all. The Methodists suggested that only one Protestant Church be retained for every one thousand people, and that all denominations co-operate in bringing this about. Dr. Edmund D. S. Brunner declared that it could be brought about in one year if the leaders were not afraid of their yearbooks. One of the delegates declared that it could be brought about but that it might mean crucifixion for those who brought it about, and suggested that crucifixion had served with great efficacy in ushering in a new era.

However we may think of it, the country Church problem is a problem, and one which we, as a Church 90 per cent rural, must face, and must face thoughtfully.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Why not order one of the self-filling fountain pens for your own use or for a present to a friend?

THE CHRISTIAN SUN would make an excellent present for a Christmas gift. Fifty-two times a year would your friend be reminded of you.

Would you not like to have one of the American Standard Bibles advertised in THE SUN? A teacher's Bible or a scholar's Bible would make a good present to your friend.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" gives a full discussion of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons by departments. It is well adapted to the several grades. Send your order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Price, by mail, $2.00.

Order your copy of "Peloubet's Select Notes" through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. There is no book so well suited to help one in the study of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons. Price, by mail, $2.00.

The North Carolina Christian Conference can be made one of the best organizations of the State. The three local Conferences should embrace the opportunity of making it the missionary supervisor of their efforts in establishing Churches. The purpose is to make it also inspirational and educational, as well as missionary.

Are there any Christian Churches in the Southern Convention now without pastors? If so, will the secretary or some member of the Church kindly write, that we may give names and references, so that vacancies may be supplied. With our present supply of pastors, no Church, it would seem, needs to be pastorless during 1925.

Rev. H. W. Brewer, of Lanett, Ala., one of our worthy young ministers, is working for some weeks now in behalf of Men and Millions among the Churches of our Eastern Virginia Conference. Whatever SUN readers can do to assist him as he calls will be greatly appreciated. Bro. Brewer is working persistently and worthily for a great, good cause, and thus far has been most gladly received and has met with fine success. He will be in the Eastern Virginia Conference for three or four weeks, and the friends there who have subscribed to Men and Millions will certainly confer a great favor upon a most worthy cause by taking this opportunity to pay something on their pledges.

The Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention, at a recent meeting, elected Miss Gertrude Brown, of Elon College, to be field secretary for the woman's and young people's work during 1925, and Miss Brown is to begin in this work January 1st. Till that date, she is assisting in collecting for Men and Millions and is meeting a happy response upon the part of the people in our North Carolina Conference, where she is working. Miss Brown is one of our consecrated young women, a graduate of Elon College, president of the Philathea Class in the college, and a Christian worker whose services will be worth much to the Church. Her work is proving very helpful. Any CHRISTIAN SUN readers who have subscribed to Men and Millions, and upon whom Miss Brown may chance to call, will do well to take this advantage of paying something or all on their pledges.

The Eastern North Carolina Conference received a most worthy and capable brother-minister from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the North Carolina Conference received a most worthy and capable brother from the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, both of whom are ready for work in Christian Churches. If any of our Churches are without pastor, we shall be most happy to communicate with them, and by correspondence give such facts and recommendations as may be requested. THE SUN's editor is personally acquainted with both men and can speak in highest praise and commendation of both.

One good brother sends a remittance for himself and two members of his family of $560, with these gracious and generous words: "I am ashamed that I have not paid our subscriptions before now, but money has been hard to get hold of. I sold some property, and am sending you check for $560 to pay our pledges now. Hope it can be used to good advantage." This is a loyalty and a devotion worthy of consideration and emulation by SUN readers. It is such willing hearts and ready hands as these that carry forward the kingdom of our Lord and help build up the enterprises which our Heavenly Father has committed to our crae.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers will learn with deep concern and regret that our venerable Rev. J. W. Wellons had a fall in his room Friday night, November 28th, which has entailed much suffering, and from the effects of which he has not yet recovered. After disrobing to retire at about 9 P. M., he fell on the floor and was unable to give any alarm or to attract the attention of any one until about 6 o'clock next morning, thus remaining on the floor through the whole night. He suffered greatly from cold, and his limbs and body are very sore. At this writing (December 1st), he is resting more comfortably, and no serious results or symptoms have developed. Every possible attention by physicians and friends at the college is being given.

SUN readers who may chance to pass through Raleigh, the capital of the good State of North Carolina, will do well to take a look at the Christian Church on Hillsboro Street, the First Christian Church of Raleigh. It is a magnificent piece of work, and one in which the entire denomination can take pride and from which take hope, heart and courage. The opening exercises on Sunday, November 23d, were very largely attended, and great surprises were expressed on every hand at the magnificent plant, the artistic finishing and design, and the elaborate and complete equipment for Church and Sunday School purposes. We hope to present in an early issue of THE SUN a proper account of the opening exercises and a description of this beautiful and magnificent building.

Our workers in the field during November collected from individual subscribers something over $2,600. The faithful, the loyal and the true who are in a position to do so are meeting these pledges. The great pity is that the movement was not kept before the people more constantly and the needs and merits of the movement had not been brought home to the subscribers with more emphasis and force. However this may be, and however difficult it may be for us now to pay these pledges, it is certainly the Christian duty of those who made the pledges to pay them, even at great sacrifice, if they are able to do so. Some things in life are worth more than dollars; among these, loyalty to our Church, devotion to the kingdom of God, and an abiding sense of duty that will not let us fail of our obligations.

The following from Bro. R. L. Fine, secretary of Palm Street Sunday School, Greensboro, shows the fine spirit prevailing in this school and indicates the effect of mission Sunday in the Sunday School when properly observed:

"Dear Bro. Atkinson:

"Please find inclosed check from Palm Street Church for $16.69. We are very proud of this offering, and are putting forth every effort to increase it each mission Sunday. We had an attendance of 169 last Sunday, including little folks (about one-half), which shows an average of about 10 cents per member.

"We find in giving unto others as God has prospered us, that we not only help send the gospel to others, but that it builds up our Sunday School as well, and the people are taking more interest in Sunday School work.

"I have been asked to send you an invitation to visit our Sunday School and would be glad for you to let me know just when you can come, so we can arrange a program."

PROTRACTED MEETING.

A series of revival meetings began at the Elm Avenue Christian Church, Portsmouth, Va., on Sunday, November 23d, and will continue through a period of two weeks. Rev. V. T. Crawford, the pastor of the Church, is doing the preaching, and it is expected that much good will be accomplished by these services.

The Sunday School work at Elm Avenue is going forward. Two weeks ago a campaign was started for one hundred more new members within thirty days, and it is encouraging to note that already there has been a decided increase in the number of members recorded.

The men's Bible class is growing quite rapidly and is doing splendid work, and the Sunday School, in all departments, is making splendid progress.

WEEK OF PRAYER IN THE CHURCHES.

To the Churches of Christ in America:

Our one Lord calls us at the beginning of another year to join our hearts and minds in united thanksgiving, confession, and petition.

Never was the measure of our blessings so full and overflowing. Even in our affliction the Lord our God is merciful and gracious. Let us give thanks, "For whoso offereth the sacrifice of Thanksgiving glorifieth me and prepareth a way that I may show him the salvation of God."

Never was there deeper need for penitence. As individuals, as nations, as a Church, we have failed in our duty. We have done what we ought not to have done, and we have left undone the things we ought to have done.

Never was there deeper need for petition. Confronted by our own personal necessities and by the needs of the world we have to transcend the failures of the past and yet the past is the only ground on which we can build. We must seek in the light of Christ to see light upon the problem of winning out of the imperfect past itself a future in accord with the mind and will of God.

We cannot doubt that the spirit of God is abroad in the world. This is the assurance of our Lord Himself. It is the Divine Spirit who is making men discontented with conflict and division and quickening their hope and purpose toward a better order on the earth. It is He who is leading men, according to Christ's promise, into the Truth, and where He is, there men are aware of liberty.

Let us open our lives in sincerity and love to the fullest realization of the presence of God. Laying aside all pride and prejudice, all self-satisfaction and judgment of others, all malice and cunning, all party strife and ill will, may we ever let Christ dwell in us richly.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

"In nothing be anxious; but in everything, by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God.

"And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."

Yours in the faith and fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ,

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

WORLD LEAGUE AGAINST ALCOHOLISM.

The United States is becoming not more lawless, but less so. This statement is based on reports from police departments of 300 leading cities and the District of Columbia, covering all States except North Carolina and Oklahoma. The survey, the most extensive ever made, was compiled by Robert E. Corradini, of the World League Against Alcoholism, in connection with police departments throughout the country. It is submitted to the press by Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, general secretary of the league.

The survey covers the total number of arrests in the last four years prior to prohibition and the first four years under prohibition. It is true that the number of arrests of the dry period is greater than the number for the wet period, but when analyzed in connection with the increase of population, which is 5,000,000, the findings are contrary to the much too prevalent belief that America is growing more criminal.

There has actually been a decrease in arrests for drunkenness since the Volsted act went into effect, and that decrease is 42.3 per cent for the 300 cities, or a million fewer cases of drunkenness than there were in the wet period, for the whole nation. Where formerly drunkenness cases made up 32.5 per cent of the total arrests in the country, they have now been cut to 18.8 per cent.

From 1913 to 1916 there was a yearly average of 58,946 persons arrested for all causes out of each million population. The total for 300 cities was 1,756,078. During the first four years of prohibition, arrests for all causes were 2,040,700. The population of these cities had increased 5,000,000 during the period. Applying this ratio of increase to the entire population, there is a yearly total of nearly 10,000 fewer arrests during the dry period than during the wet. Failure to take into consideration all the surrounding circumstances is largely responsible for much talk about increase of crime throughout the country.

Police records show that the greatest single factor in arrests today is the automobile. The largest number of arrests is generally for violation of traffic laws and ordinances.

The yearly number of arrests in the 300 cities for intoxication only, during the wet period was 572,106, or 19,193 out of every million of population. This was reduced in the four prohibition years to 383,711, or 11,067 per million population. Again, taking this as a ratio for the entire country, there would be a decrease of 1,021,416 arrests for drunkenness, or 42.3 per cent.

The saving to the States that can be pointed to directly in connection with the crime situation is bigger today than before prohibition. The million fewer drunks, the arresting of each of which costs the police department alone $94.00, has resulted in saving from ninety-five million to a hundred million dollars yearly. Adding to this the cost of trial and detention, which sometimes goes over a period of months, this amount could be doubled and yet be a conservative estimate.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, RALEIGH.

The opening exercises of the First Christian Church, of Raleigh, N. C., took place at 11 A. M. Sunday, November 23, 1924. After the introductory services, directed by the pastor, Dr. Wm. Davidson Parry, and prayer by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the sermon was delivered by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College. The congregation was large and highly pleased with the discourse of the speaker. The musical program was well rendered, Mrs. Fred Wheeler being soloist for the occasion.

The afternoon services were held at 3 o'clock. The pastor directed the exercises. The outstanding number on the program was a violin solo by Miss Mary Brockwell, accompanied by Mrs. Roy O. Caveness, who presided at the organ. Anthem, "Great and Marvelous are Thy Works," especially impressed this writer. The sermon by Dr. W. C. Wicker gave attention to the outstanding principles of the Christian Church, and it was favorably received by a large and appreciative audience.

Before the sermon, the pastor had the pleasure of receiving into the communion of the Church five members, and administered the rite of baptism to the infant of the family. At the close of the services an opportunity was given the congregation to contribute to the building fund of the Church.

At 7:30 o'clock a large audience had assembled. The introductory services were concluded by a solo by Mr. Joseph Price, and the pastor introduced Dr. J. O. Atkinson, secretary of missions of the Southern Christian Convention, who held the attention of his hearers for an hour to their own delight. Thus were concluded the exercises of a most auspicious occasion.

As a matter of record, the trustees are C. H. Stephenson, J. T. Holt, W. C. Adkins, L. L. Vaughan, and F. T. Ricks. The officers of the Church are H. M. Rhodes, secretary; R. F. Harward, treasurer; C. H. Stephenson, assistant treasurer, and J. T. Holt, auditor. The building committee, on whom was the burden of directing the building program of the Church, was composed of the following: L. L. Vaughan (chairman), C. H. Stephenson, R. F. Harward, W. C. Adkins, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Wm. Davidson Parry. This committee is to be complimented for its good judgment in the selection of plans and choice of architect and builder or contractor. The whole so harmonizes that defects, if any, are not discernable.

This Church was organized in 1881 by Rev. W. G. Clements, and a brick house of worship was erected in 1882, which was used until 1922, when, after a heavy snow, it was condemned as unsafe. The old building was taken down in 1923 to give place to the present structure.

The new building was designed along lines termed English Romanesque, and it shows the influence of what might be called "Norman Gothic." The exterior is of native stone, carefully selected to produce a soft blending of varied-color tones; the trim and carved work is of limestone. And a roof of heavy, rustic, graduating slate of natural color produces a pleasing contrast with the stone, both as to shade and texture.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, RALEIGH, N. C.

The main auditorium, furnished with circular pews, has a seating capacity of 350, with gallery around either side accommodating 200 more. In addition to this, the plan is so arranged that the Sunday School auditorium may be thrown in with this by means of rolling partitions, thus adding 300 to the capacity, or making it possible to address 850 people from the pulpit.

On the second floor over the Sunday School auditorium, Sunday School class-rooms are provided, and the recreation room in the basement accommodates the junior Sunday School and also permits being used for class-room purposes as well as various entertainments, suppers, club gatherings, etc. Connected with this large recreation room is a completely equipped kitchen and pantry. This was cordially tested out during the North Carolina Conference, which was held the three days following.

All pews, lighting fixtures, organ grills, etc., were made from special designs, harmonizing with the general architectural treatment. The whole is a "thing of beauty" and a monument to the loyal devotion of an earnest people.

The man who ran the elevator of the skyscraper was talking to a passenger. "The judge certainly did soak him," he said. "He sentenced him to three years and ten days. Now, I understand the three years all right; but what the ten days were for I'd like to know."

"That was the war-tax," said a quiet citizen who got aboard at the tenth floor.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE PERILS OF PROGRESS.

All progress is purchased through peril. This seems to be a rule of life. There is a Scripture which says, "Without shedding of blood is no remission." With almost equal verity it may be said, "Without peril there is no progress, even in our Lord's work." It is to be noted that the Mission Boards everywhere are in debt—some 40, some 60, and some 100-fold. One is disposed to criticise immediately any enterprise or institution, the debit side of whose account grows more rapidly than the credit side. And it is deplorable, particularly in doing the Lord's work and the work of the Church, that such is the case. It may be said, however, not in palliation of this deplorable condition, but to a degree, in explanation of it, that this is one of the many perils of progress. No advance in life is made without paying the price. One sometimes thinks that both man and God have to be disturbed in order to bring tranquility and peace. On a certain lake on whose bosom once sailed a vessel that carried our Lord, a tremendous storm arose and a beastly wind was bearing down upon all the vessels that sailed that lake. Our Lord was in one of these ships and was asleep on a pillow. While that storm raged and the billows beat and danger threatened, our Lord did not interpose nor manifest His power until He was importuned by His followers, who had become much agitated over their perilous situation. Our Lord arose and rebuked the storm only when appealed to by those in distress. One does not find it otherwise in the history of the Church and of the dealings of God with man. Perils of the sea are the perils of progress, and only through the perils of His followers have the disciples been willing to cry out, "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?"

First. The first peril of progress is a lack of any overwhelming sense of need, any apprehensive and agitated state of mind. Every invention of man, every discovery that has made for progress, every forward step in the material and the mechanical universe, has been made by a mind that was apprehensive or a soul that was agitated or an individual that agonized until the achievement was realized.

Fulton and Stephenson and Whitney and the rest spent ceaseless hours of disturbed rest until their agitated bodies were weary with their work in trying to give the world the benefit of an idea that stirred their souls. Most discoverers have spent a life that, as we look at them now, seemed hardly worth their living because of the ceaseless anxiety, worry and agitation, to find that which their souls told them they must find. Leaving these aside, read in Holy Writ of the agitation, the disturbed mind, the anxious hours that filled months, not to say years, of the life of Moses and of David, of Elijah and Jeremiah, and Isaiah. The forerunner of our Lord was a voice crying in the wilderness, agitated, disturbed by an overwhelming sense of need. Our Lord was a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and the great souls of Peter and James and John were agitated with tumultuous desires, ambitions and undertakings. From the day Paul was converted until he departed, his life was spent in one continuous, incessant fight, warfare, struggle and effort. He was agitated over the wrongs of his day, the injustice of His time, and evils on every hand. If we are not making the progress as a Church today that we ought to make, one is disposed to inquire, "Where is there amongst us this overwhelming sense of need, this agitation?"

Second. A second peril of progress is the unwillingness on the part of the individual to disturb God Himself that tranquility may come and peace be brought to the earth. One would not intimate that God sleeps or slumbers, but one may declare with emphasis that God's power to save, to lift up, to redeem, is only released when an individual somewhere, when a mortal man somewhere becomes stirred over a situation and has the courage, the daring, the faith to scale the battlements of glory and invade the precincts of God with the weight and import of his message. "From the days of John the Baptist till now," declares Matthew, "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the violent take it by force." God had the power to save China long before Robert Morrison was born. He was sufficient to redeem Africa long before Livingston's day. He had salvation for India long before William Carey ever cobbled shoes or began to preach. But we well know that He did not release that power until these men became disturbed, agitated over conditions of which they made themselves a part, and out of the depths of which they cried, "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" God had the power to start a revival in England long before Wesley went to Oxford, but only when Charles and John Wesley laid their troubled souls and anxious hearts on the altar of God and cried out from the depths of their anguish and agony did God begin a revival that swept over all England and brought us our note of modern evangelism. A willingness on the part of the individual, a dauntless daring to disturb God Himself is a part of the price that God requires of individuals in order to make progress. Unless we are willing to risk ourselves, our strength, our energy, in the effort to secure divine help, the storms will rage with fury and the winds will beat, but the Lord's hand will be withheld from helping. "Those who have done most have dared most." But it is perilous to dare. Christ found it so. Paul found it so. All daring ones have found it so.

Third. A third peril to progress is the unwillingness to pay the price in actual service and sacrifice. We are living in an easy and an indifferent time. We are self-centered; the world is thinking today in terms of how it may get. It thinks very little in terms of what it may do or what it may give. Some people give from their abundance, but rare indeed it is to find one of whom it may be said, "He or she hath given her living." We of the Christian Church are unwilling to pay the price, seemingly, of progress. We began a few years ago our wonderful and praiseworthy Men and Millions Movement. More than one-half of our ministers today are wholly indifferent to the movement, or they are unwilling to mention it under any condition in their pulpits or to their people. One is induced to say that the largest per cent of our Christian ministers have not dared mention Men and Millions in their pulpits or in their congregation in twelve months or more. What is said of the ministers may be said also of our outstanding laymen. In very few Churches will you find any one who is willing to pay the price of seeming to be disagreeable and unpopular and advocate a movement that spells progress. One need not resort to Men and Millions, but to any program that we may unitedly put on. I challenge the Church to put on a program of any kind that means a forward step, that means a larger task, that means an upward movement, that will enlist the united and co-operative effort and sympathy of the ministry and layety of the Church. We fear perils, we fear adventure, we fear daring; yet peril is the price one must pay for progress. Have we not fallen into easy channels from year to year, contented that our membership be about the same, our contributions about the same, our progress about the same. Are we willing to hazard the perils of progress and pay the price required? Those who do most, dare most.

Fourth. Another peril of progress is an impatience of results. Our Saviour dared to do, and Paul braved the jibes, insults, injuries of his fellows, but they were patient. No sort of criticism disturbed the tranquil spirit of our Lord. He knew He was right, and no sort of criticism could deflect him from his course. We must face the peril of impatience in our endeavor to go forward —to make progress.

Take our own work in missions. There is no part of it that cannot and does not easily provoke criticism. But the peril of progress must be faced. And those who work, those who dare must pay the price.

THE NEXT STEP.

The next vital step for results and achievement in Church work for 1925 is the every-member canvass. The wise pastor who is trying to put into his Church more than he gets out of it will not begin the new Conference year without some definite plans and purposes. What would one of our pastors say of a farmer who begins the crop year without planning what to plant, how to cultivate, and when to reap? The purposeless and planless pastor is a hindrance and a burden, rather than a help and a blessing to his Church.

While the Conference year is new and fresh, and before the harvest time comes for casting in the cycle for soul-saving, why not now get the Church in a happy and wholesome working frame of mind? The every-member canvass can do this very thing. Every Church member has the right to expect that he or she will be given the privilege of making systematic and definite contributions through the year to the life and work of the Church and benevolences.

All our Southern Conferences have voted to have stewardship month, or months. Some voted for December and January, some for January and February. This means that our pastors have no time to lose if they are to carry out what their Conference requested and urged them to do. And there is no better way to carry out this wise and wholesome decision of Conference than for the pastors to enlighten their members on the plain biblical plan and method of Christian giving, and then put on the every-member canvass.

No pastor has done his duty by his people if he waits till the last of the Conference year to begin to get the Lord's money for the Lord's work. We should not make the Church a pauper by begging for it, nor have we the right to pauperize the kingdom of God by giving it a "hand-out" at the end of the year. The Church and the kingdom should have our first consideration.

Again we say, the most vital step to take now for our Church work in 1925 is to put on the every-member canvass at the earliest possible date.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE CONTINUES.

The North Carolina Conference cannot be dissolved till all mortgages on local Churches have been fully discharged. This is the ruling of the Attorney-General, and there is no escape from the situation. Wisdom would dictate that we make the most of the opportunity thus presented, and this is exactly what the Conference, in session at Raleigh, last week resolved to do. Who knows but that this united Conference has come to the kingdom for such a time as this?

By vote, unanimous vote, the North Carolina Conference from now on will meet annually till all obligations are discharged in a two days' session. The first item of business will be the ratification of the proceedings of the three Conferences in the State. These Conferences are to exercise all the functions of Conferences, subject to ratification by the North Carolina Conference.

When the ratification is over, the North Carolina Conference will then give itself to the consideration of missions, stewardship, Christian education and Christian union. The addresses and discussions under these themes will be inspirational, educational, and statesman-like in their constructive planning and outlook. The General Conference will, therefore, not be a duplication of the local Conferences, but something far different, something our general work sorely needs.

One item in particular we should call special attention to, and that is the reorganization of the Christian Missionary Association of the Conference. The Home Mission Board is an incorporated body, and it is commissioned during the year to reorganize the C. M. A. and to have it meet in connection with the Conference annually. Here is a splendid field for service to Church and kingdom. This board, too, is given the further commission of undertaking to found a centennial Church in the bounds of the Conference this next year.

There is need for the detail work of the local Conference, and there is the larger need of a great inspirational gathering for the challenging issues of the kingdom. The present arrangement gives us opportunity for both types of work. The Christian Sun calls upon our leadership in pulpit and pew to give themselves whole-heartedly and earnestly to strengthening our work in both types of Conference.

The next session of the North Carolina Conference will celebrate the centennial of our organized work in North Carolina. We should have a thousand persons from all parts of the State and from our Virginia Churches present on that day. Already great plans are being laid to make it a memorable event in the history of our denomination. Let us plan for it and let us attend.

Let us, beloved, make use of the local Conference for our detail work, and of the North Carolina Conference for inspiration and forward-looking educational planning for our general enterprises through united effort. Thus there is a place and a need for the North Carolina Conference. Christian statesmanship dictates that we should enter this open door of service and seize this opportunity to promote the interests of Christ's cause through our denomination.

C. M. A. TO BE REORGANIZED.

One of the main reasons for continuing the North Carolina Christian Conference was that jointly with it there might be given a new lease of life to the North Carolina Christian Missionary Association, or rather that such an association might be created anew. Before the merger of the Conferences in North Carolina there were three small associations. After the merger there was for a time one association, for which little time or room was found or given. Within the past year or two, even the remnants of this were rather negligible. This deplorable fact was one of the regrettable features of the merger, and later of the dissolution. It is now believed that, with a State Conference meeting annually to discuss missions, Christian education, the Orphanage, and other interests of the Church, the Christian Missionary Association can be formed, which will mean something worth while in this State and to the Church. If the North Carolina Christian Conference can devote its energies in a large measure to doing State-wide work for missions in North Carolina, it will achieve something in the coming years well worthy of the consecrated efforts and sacrifices of the Christian Church membership in the State.

The following was adopted in the State Convention at Raleigh last week:

"We recommend that we undertake, through our Mission Board, the reorganization of a Christian Missionary Association in the bounds of the Conference, that the constituent Conferences be urged to co-operate in this association, and that it meet annually in connection with this Conference."

"We further recommend the following persons as members of the Mission Board: W. C. Wicker (chairman ex officio), W. P. Lawrence, J. O. Atkinson, W. K. Holt, and K. B. Johnson; and that this board begin at once to plan for the erection of a centennial Church, at some point in the bounds of this Conference."

In keeping with this resolution, the president, Dr. W. C. Wicker, has already called a meeting of the Mission Board, at which meeting all the details of the Christian Missionary Association are to be worked out. The Eastern Virginia Christian Missionary Association has grown and prospered through the years, and has hurt no good work in that State. On the other hand, it has helped very materially in building up the Churches of the Conference to which it is attached. There seems to be no reason why the North Carolina Association should not now be developed on a scale worthy of the large constituency back of it, and also worthy of the great opportunity that seems to be afforded such an enterprise. There are many places in North Carolina where Churches are very much needed and where, if built invaluable aid could be rendered to the entire denomination.

SHALL WE COMMIT SUICIDE?

By Rt. Hon. Winston S. Churchill,
Formerly First Lord of the British Admiralty.

The story of the human race is war. Except for brief and precarious interludes, there has never been peace in the world. But, up to the present time, the means of destruction at the disposal of man have not kept pace with his ferocity. Reciprocal extermination was impossible in the stone age. One cannot do much with a clumsy club. With the best will in the world to destroy his species, each man was restricted to a very limited area of activity. So on the balance, the life-forces kept a steady lead over the forces of death, and gradually tribes, villages and governments were evolved.

The effort at destruction then entered upon a new phase. War became a collective enterprise. Roads were made which facilitated the movement of large numbers of men. Armies were organized. Many improvements in the apparatus of slaughter were devised. But here again another set of checks began to operate. The governments were not sufficiently secure. The armies were liable to violent internal disagreements. It was extremely difficult to feed large numbers of men once they were concentrated, and consequently the efficiency of the efforts at destruction became fitful and was tremendously hampered by defective organization. Thus again there was a balance on the credit side of life.

It was not until the dawn of the twentieth century of the Christian era that war really began to enter into its kingdom as the potential destroyer of the human race. The organization of mankind into great States and empires, and the rise of nations to full collective consciousness enabled enterprises of slaughter to be planned and executed upon a scale and with a perseverance never before imagined. Good finances, the resources of world-wide credit and trade, the accumulation of large capital reserves, made it possible to divert for considerable periods the energies of whole peoples to the task of devastation. Education not only brought the course of the conflict within the comprehension of every one, but rendered each person serviceable in a high degree for the purpose in hand. The press afforded a means of unification and of mutual encouragement; religion, having discreetly avoided conflict on the fundamental issues, offered its encouragements and consolations, through all its forms, impartially to all combatants. Lastly, science unfolded her treasures and her secrets to the desperate demands of men and placed in their hands agencies and apparatus almost decisive in their character.

In consequence, many novel features presented themselves. Instead of merely starving fortified towns, whose nations were methodically subjected, or sought to be subjected, to the process of reduction by famine. The entire population in one capacity or another took part in the war; all were equally the object of attack. The air opened paths along which death and terror could be carried far behind the lines of the actual armies, to women, children, the aged, the sick, who in earlier struggles would perforce have been left untouched. Marvelous organization of railroads, steamships and motor vehicles placed and maintained tens of millions of men continually in action. Healing and surgery in their exquisite developments returned them again and again to the shambles.

War in Nineteen-Nineteen.

But all that happened in the four years of the great war was only a prelude to what was preparing for the fifth year. The campaign of the year 1919 would have witnessed an immense accession to the power of destruction. Had the Germans retained the morale to make good their retreat to the Rhine, they would have been assaulted in the summer of 1919 with forces and by methods incomparably more prodigious than any yet employed. Thousands of aeroplanes would have shattered their cities. Scores of thousands of cannon would have blasted their front. Arrangements were being made to carry simul-

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Complainers are of two sorts. Those who never do anything, and those who promise, but never do. There are two other classes—those who promise and fulfill, and those who do without a promise. The woman who brought the "alabaster box of very precious ointment and poured it on His head as He sat at meat at Simon's house" had made no promise; it was the spontaneous act of what her heart desired to do; but "his disciples had indignation, saying, to what purpose is this waste?" They had done nothing, and they were the first to complain; and, remember, they were His disciples. It is always members of the Church that complain about what the Church does with money that they never gave. People who give without making promises and those who keep their promises are not the complainers in the Church. This leads up to Men and Millions pledges again. People say: "I am so tired of hearing about Men and Millions"; but they are not the members who have paid their pledges in full, or have paid the pledges as they came due. But they say, again, "There are too many overhead expenses; it costs too much to send men and women out to collect these pledges." And again they say: "I do not believe in spending so much money helping other Churches, and they never help our Church."

Now, as to overhead expenses, or the cost of collections. If those who have made pledges to Men and Millions would pay their pledges there would be no more overhead expense. The nonpayment of pledges makes the overhead expense a necessity. As to helping some Churches and not others, that is simply wise because the money is spent where it will make a permanent return of money to the Church. Facts prove this to be true. All movements follow this same law or rule, as the building of public roads. It is impossible to concrete or sand-gravel all the roads in the State; but the main roads can be built and small roads lead into the great highways, and thus all the people are benefitted. So help is given to important points, that will do most for the kingdom and the Christian Church. The way to stop expense in Men and Millions collections is for those who have pledged to pay their pledges in good faith and with a good will. The complaints come from those who have not paid their pledges.

There is another class of members who have paid their pledges and complain because others have not paid their pledges. On the surface, this seems like a just criticism; but finding fault does not correct faults, unless there is power to compel delinquents to meet their obligations; but it is fair and Christian to reason with men and women on all subjects of failure to perform duty. "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." That is, change can take in the worst of men, and certainly in Christian men and women who have thoughtlessly or misunderstandingly failed to do what they should have done. Many of those who made pledges to Men and Millions have not considered the value of that campaign and the great results that have flowed from it—new Churches built, the quickened missionary pace, the educational progress, the increase in Church membership—all indicate substantial progress in Church activities. Those who do not help the Church in her forward movements should be mum. That is one case in which silence is good, if not golden. According to Colonel J. E. West's calculations, the Southern Convention started out five years ago to raise, within five years, five hundred thousand dollars for Church buildings and equipment; and, as a matter of fact, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars have been raised for those two purposes, or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars more than the goal set five years ago. That is only a part of the results of the great effort to raise money and improve men. Churches, like men, make progress by hard work. We will not complain. We will rather thank God and take courage. What the Church needs is silence in the field of complaint, activity in the field of paying M. and M. pledges, an increase of faith, and a new determination to pay our pledges. W. W. Staley.

ELON LETTER.

We have made many a joke at the expense of philosophers and psychologists and other scholarly experts. Some of them were deserved, too; but these patient investigators have in their study of adolescence exploded some of the theories and adages that men had from time immemorial accepted as basic in life and conduct. They have also indicated the way which we must take in order to solve the problems of boyhood and youth. And so these musty fellows of much learning and more patience have laid us under lasting obligation to them.

They have taught us, for example, that the sowing of wild oats is not only not necessary, but that when they are sown it is traceable to the failure of parents to function properly in guiding the life of youth. Why, these musty fellows asked, do boys sow wild oats when our girls do not? The answer they found not in an essential difference in nature, but in the marked difference in the care and supervision and guidance provided for the two sexes in their formative days. Flappers of the modern variety and bobbed-hair bandits show that girls too can, and will, and do, sow wild oats when they are neglected.

They have also taught us the splendid value of Christian nurture as the means of producing in youth the desirable fruits of Christian character. The home is once more become to be recognized as the basic Christian institution. The mother is again enthroned in the popular judgment as God's best teacher of religion, and the father as His most efficacious priest, while children are rated as citizens of the kingdom of heaven, and not as aliens from God's mercy. The chief business of home, of school, of Church, is ever to keep them so conscious of this birthright relationship of their spiritual nature that they will never stray from the paths of right and duty, meeting every crisis of life with ready response and passing through it into yet larger conceptions of the Christian way. Religious education is become a passion in our day, and religious education is but a phase of Christian nurture.

These musty scholars have taught us that children are not a class, but an endless series of individual personalities, each differing essentially from every other and having to be specifically prescribed for in the varied relations of life. They have watched life unfold and develop and have discovered certain things that are necessary if results worthy the issues at stake are to be achieved. Christian parents and workers with children and youth owe it to their great responsibilities to get acquainted with the literature touching these matters. Such study will pay a handsome dividend. W. A. Harper.

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

Meeting Our Obligations.

If the state of Christianity was to be judged by the lightness in which some people hold their sacred obligations to pastor, Men and Millions and colleges, I fear we would be compelled to conclude that the religious temperature was very low; however, I feel that this is not the real index to the effectiveness or noneffectiveness of our religion.

With some, the question of stewardship has never entered into their life's program, neither has the principle taken hold of their life. Some folks never pledge money to any cause, while others pledge, never intending that they shall ever be called upon to pay what they have pledged. If they are not called upon when the first payment is due, they think the whole pledge becomes null and void. Others say I have bought a farm and pray to be excused, but they made the pledge before they bought the farm. Another man built a fine house and furnished it well since he made his pledge to Bethlehem College, who owes two payments on his subscription, and when asked for it the other day said he could not pay a cent on it now and did not know when he could, as he was completely tied up with his own finances. A woman, replying to a statement sent her regarding her pledge, said: "I am going to ask you to cancel my pledge, as I won't be able to pay it, for I must look after my own Church and people first; we are just a lot of poor people, and it is hard to make both ends meet. Anyhow, one of the Convention officials who was here last year made it plain that I did not need to pay it." Still another said: "I will be obliged if you will cancel my name from the list."

Is it any wonder that some people do not prosper and that they always remain poor, when they are so self-centered, religiously inconsistent, evaders of religious debts, robbers of God? If all would pay their vows, pledges and debts to God and their fellow-men as far as it is in their power to do so, God would prosper them, their lives would be happier and more worth-while, and the Church and its institutions would never need to go begging for support.

But, thank God, there is a brighter side—behind the clouds is the sun still shining. A young lady who is back some on her pledge to the college because her health failed, and she was compelled to go back to a less salary, said: "I intend to pay it all as quickly as possible, as I hold a pledge as something very sacred." Another who has paid up to date on his pledge stated in a letter: "It is a pleasure to me to know that you have such a fine enrollment of students at Bethlehem College this year, and I trust you will be able to care for the present indebtedness, and so be able to go forward in the erection of an administration building and have same ready for next year. My heart is with you in the fine work you are doing, and I wish it were possible for me to come to the rescue in a larger financial way." We certainly appreciate the spirit of these characters and all of their kind. If all who have made pledges to Bethlehem College were as noble in their purpose and as Christ-like in their attitude toward the college, we could pay off our indebtedness soon.

Here is how three classes of people divide their incomes: the tightwad—for living expenses, 37 per cent; education, 1 per cent, giving 1 per cent; recreation, 1 per cent, saving 60 per cent. The spendthrift—for living expenses, 58 per cent; for education, 1 per cent, giving 1 per cent; recreation, 40 per cent, saving none. The thrifty Christian man—for living expenses, 50 per cent; education, 10 per cent, giving 10 per cent; recreation, 10 per cent, saving 20 per cent.

Amid the tramping feet of the many who throng the earth, there is always plenty of honest people; as a proof of this, a man who had gone off without thinking of paying for his meal at the dining-table in Union Depot, Montgomery, Ala., three years ago, paid for it yesterday. Honest people will treat God, men and the Church and its institutions as well.

Wadley, Ala. S. L. BEOUGHER.

A GREAT REVIVAL.

One of the greatest revivals in the history of the city has just come to a close under the leadership of Mrs. Coretta Johnson Mason, of Lynchburg, Va. She is known as the "girl evangelist," is nineteen years of age. In spite of her youth and other handicaps, she has proved her ability to attract great crowds night after night for more than two weeks by her marvelous spiritual personality, deep consecration and the simple message of the gospel.

Every part of the commodious Church building has been taxed, and hundreds turned away. Nearly one hundred and fifty conversions and hundreds of reconsecrations are the direct results of her visit, whilst indirectly the influence of the services have been manifested in surrounding cities and towns.

Visiting pastors and Church officials are unanimous in expressing the opinion that, in general interest, sustained spiritual power and individual enthusiasm, these meetings have been the most fruitful held in Portsmouth in many years.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, D. D., had charge of the music, and led the great congregations in song every night. His solos and the services of prominent singers he secured contributed largely to the success of the campaign and were publically acknowledged at the closing meeting.

HENRY WALLACE DOWDING,
Pastor.

WHY GO TO CHURCH?

The Christian Church is the most salutary influence and the most valuable institution in America. Any man who loves his country ought to support the Church by his presence. This is a valid reason for Church attendance, though a very subordinate one.

The far deeper consideration is that men ought to go to Church for the public and social worship of God, and for the corporate experience which comes to those who meet together to proclaim their faith in Christ. If men lack this faith they ought to go to Church in order to find it. If they say they have no taste for the service of worship in the Church, then if the fault is in that service and worship, men ought to change it; or if it is in their own hearts, they ought to change themselves.

If it is said that the sermons are tiresome, men will find that they are not more so than the other addresses to which they listen or their own conversation, or most of the reading in which they indulge. All preaching could be lifted to a higher plane if all men supported the Church and put their strength into it. Even as it is, however, the Church is good, the best and most helpful thing we have, and every American home ought to pour its best life into the Church and draw its best life out of it.—Robert E. Speer.

MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

FOURTH FINANCIAL GOAL.

In four years we have more than reached this goal, having spent in Church extension locally $541,795.39. This is wonderful! The year 1924, in my opinion, will increase this amount beyond $600,000. During what other five years have we done so much in the South for the extension of local Church plants? In what period of ten years have we done so much? Yet, we are told that the Men and Millions Movement is a failure; that some preachers and laymen are against it; that it was not started right; and has not been handled right. Suppose everything had been run right, and suppose these men who oppose Men and Millions had been placed in charge to manage it. We might have raised one million dollars, but I would sooner think not over one million cents. I congratulate the Church on going beyond this goal. We are still feeling the swing of the movement. South Norfolk and Cypress Chapel, in Eastern Virginia, and other Churches in the other Conferences are starting on building plans, and I believe 1926 will keep up the building average of the past five years. Let us praise God for what he has done, and take fresh courage.

J. E. West,
Chairman of Mission Board.

OBJECTIVES OF THE BUREAU OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP AND PROMOTION.

1. Help our brotherhood to realize the importance of stewardship in their personal spiritual lives, recognizing that the whole matter of giving and of the use of money is a vital function of the soul and of the spiritual life. The spiritual emphasis must be made clear to both individuals and Churches.

2. Study the Scriptures to find what they teach about Christian stewardship. Few people realize how much the Bible has to say on this subject. It is a veritable treatise on the principles of stewardship. It gives clear instruction on both personal and Church finance. We must study anew what the Scriptures teach about it.

3. See that this neglected and important subject gets its proper recognition in the thought, prayer, plans and program of life, giving it the same consideration that we do the other basic themes, such as missions, evangelism, Christian education, service, etc.

4. That each Church observes a stewardship-finance period each year, putting on a real stewardship program in all departments of the Church apart from the raising of money; a real study of the whole subject. November and December are the special stewardship months in our denominational Church-year program.

5. An annual every-member canvass in every Church, with a budget, weekly offering and duplex envelopes.

6. A stewardship-finance department in each regional Convention, each Conference, each local Church, with an active stewardship-finance secretary in charge.

7. The Churches of a Conference putting on the annual every-member canvass simultaneously.

8. Enlisting tithers. Tithing is entirely different from generous giving. Every Christian should tithe, and every tither should bear testimony by enrolling.

9. Induce giving in a right spirit, and in right proportion, and as an act of worship so that the grace of giving may be developed.

10. Improve the financial plans and methods in Conferences and local Churches, making them more scriptural.

11. Make clear the definitely accepted principles of Christian stewardship.

12. Help the Churches to feel their full responsibility for the training of their entire constituency in stewardship of life and possessions.

13. Urge that this subject be regularly presented in Convention, Conference, and institute programs, and that special stewardship institutes be held.

METROPOLITAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Delegates and visitors from seven of the ten Conferences composing the Metropolitan Christian Convention met at the Hotel Navarre Thursday evening, November 13th, at 8 o'clock. Dr. Martyn Summerbell presided in his usual admirable manner.

The Conferences represented were Ontario, New York Western, New York Central, New York Eastern, Tioga River, Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

As near as could be learned from the latest reports available, this Convention shows a numerical strength of just about 10,000. The major part of this strength is to be found in three of the Conferences—the three showing an aggregate membership of 6,972 out of a probable 10,000, and eighty Churches out of 121. In spite of the weakness of seven of the ten Conferences suggested by these figures, there was a spirit of hope prevailing which gives promise of larger things to be expected from a program of co-operation and mutual help.

The officers elected are as follows: president, Rev. W. M. Jay, Everett, Pa.; vice-president, Rev. John M. Williams, Machias, N. Y.; secretary, Rev. W. E. Baker, Ravena, N. Y.; treasurer, Mr. Harry Brate, Lakemont, N. Y.; secretary of devotions, Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D. D., LL. D., Lakemont, N. Y.; secretary of Christian education, Miss Bessie Kniffin, Middleburg, N. Y.; secretary of evangelism, Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., Carversville, Pa.; secretary of missions, Rev. P. S. Sailer, Brooklyn, N. Y.; secretary of stewardship, Rev. A. W. Sparks, Everett, Pa.; secretary of publishing, Dr. J. N. Dales, Toronto, Ont.; secretary of relief, Rev. G. A. Conibear, D. D., Lakemont, N. Y.

The matter of locating the next session of the Convention was committed to the hands of the Executive Board, with the suggestion that some central point be secured, if possible.

There seemed to be a general spirit of determination manifest on the part of those present to make this Convention mean something much more than a gathering to hear fine addresses and then go home and forget all about them. A committee on survey was appointed, whose duty it shall be to study the field, our resources, our possibilities, and our obligations. This committee is to report its findings to the Executive Board, that it may shape its program for the next meeting in the light of what they shall discover.

It was voted to raise a fund of $200 with which to carry on the correspondence, pay for printing, and such other expense as might be incurred in preparing for a gathering of much larger proportions next year. This fund of $200 is to be raised by each Conference being asked to contribute its pro rata share.

When it comes to assuming an equitable share of responsibility for the success of any enterprise, the Convention shall undertake as such, we feel sure that the Ontario Conference, though one of the smaller Conferences numerically, will be found carrying its full load. They seem so appreciative for the opportunity of closer fellowship with a nearby larger body. They are catching the vision of larger things for their own Conference in a splendid fashion too. Their recent development of the work in Toronto indicates an appreciation of the value of group work for our great urban centers. No more worthy work could be undertaken by the Convention than to encourage our Ontario brethren to undertake in the next few years the launching of a third Church in that rapidly growing city of Toronto. Dayton and Norfolk illustrate the value of grouping in large cities, while Cincinnati, Chicago, Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia and our successive failures in New York show conclusively the disaster which follows any attempt to establish our work in a great center with a single Church.

If the Metropolitan Christian Convention succeeds in establishing groups of Churches in many of the numerous urban communities to be found within its bounds, it will have justified its coming into being. No less than 234 communities are to be found in this territory, having a population of 7,000 or more in each. Sixteen such places are in the Ontario Conference; New York Western, 10; New York Central, 12; New York Eastern, 19; Tioga River, 10; Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania, 13; Western Pennsylvania, 3; New Jersey, 110; West Virginia, 9, and Southwestern West Virginia, 4.

Probably not all of these places afford opportunities for us, but certainly many of them do. It is hoped, therefore, that the entire brotherhood may engage in earnest prayer, that every member of this great section may get the vision of what our God would have us see, that we may go in and possess the land.

Letters were authorized to be written Bros. Gove and Kerr in this their hour of trial.

THE UPPER-ROOM EXPERIENCE.

"John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."—Acts 1:5.

However well-trained a man may be, he cannot succeed as an evangelist, a preacher, a teacher, or a layman unless he knows what it means to be filled with the Holy Spirit. After the ascension of our Lord, the disciples returned from the Mount of Olives and went into an upper room, where they tarried until they were endued with that power which was promised by our Master, and which has made Pentecost so memorable in the history of the Church. When John the Baptist came preaching "Behold, the Lamb of God," they forsook their nets and followed Jesus. For three years they lived with Him in the most intimate way. They were followers of the Master, and yet they were defective in character and weak in faith. And on the last journey to Jerusalem we find them quarreling as to who should have the best places in His kingdom. And when the great crisis of our Master's life came, Peter denied Him, Thomas doubted Him, and they all forsook Him and fled.

Now, let us turn from the gospels to the acts, and note the difference in these same men after they had been filled with the Holy Ghost. Peter, who was a coward in Pilate's judgment hall, is now bold as a lion, standing up in front of the angry multitude and accusing them of His murder. And what a sweet spirit they manifest, having all things in common, and no longer accounting anything their own. And what power of testimony—three thousand converted in one day, and great multitudes believed. If we compare the life and work of the apostles before and after Pentecost, we can see the difference between being born of the Spirit and being filled with the Spirit. The Bible teaches, and the history of our Church confirms the teaching, that a believer, in addition to the indwelling of the Spirit at conversion may expect another blessing corresponding in its effects to that received by the disciples at Pentecost, and which is known as "the enduement with power" or "the filling with the Holy Spirit."

What is the Filling with the Holy Spirit?

In answering this question, let us remember that the Holy Spirit is a person. "When he is come He will convict the world of sin and of righteousness and of judgment." Every Christian has the Holy Spirit dwelling in him from the moment of his conversion. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" In another Scripture it says, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." The filling of the Holy Spirit occurs when the believer is willing to surrender every room in his heart and yield control of all his life to Him. For whom is this blessing? The answer is, to all who are willing to pay the price. In Acts 10:44 we read that "The Holy Spirit fell on all them which heard the word." Many do not receive the fullness of the Spirit, when they are born of the Spirit, but the friends of Cornelius did, and so did the three thousand at Pentecost. Indeed, to preach the forgiveness of sins, without the indwelling and fullness of the Spirit, is to preach only a part of the gospel. And this is being done quite a bit in this day and generation. The effects following the infilling of the Spirit are many, and I shall only name a few of them. First, a deep, abiding assurance. Many people live in perpetual doubt. They hope they are saved, but are not sure. One day they climb to the mountain-peaks; the next day they are down in the valley of humiliation. A spirit-filled Christian begins to use Paul's positive affirmations, "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day; second, "The Word of God is wonderfully illumined. Familiar passages disclose new meanings. Hidden truths spring up at every point. Whichever way we turn we meet God." When He, the Spirit of truth, is come, He will guide you unto all truth." "The anointing which ye have received of Him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you" (1 John 2:27). Third, the believer is conscious of being led by the Spirit, "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God" (Rom. 8:14). Many strange experiences may come, and do come, to teach which they cannot understand at the time; but later they will find them to have been necessary preparations for duties which were to follow. Fourth, the spirit-filled Christian no longer attempts to "make a prayer." Prayer takes on a new meaning. They realize that they are only a mouthpiece through which the Holy Spirit maketh intercession according to the will of God. A spirit-filled Christian is a soul-winner. "Out of them will flow rivers of living water." As soon as a person is filled with the Holy Spirit, he begins at once to have power with God and man.

We have been speaking about some of the effects of being filled with the Holy Spirit, and now let us turn and see what are the conditions upon which we can be filled with the Holy Spirit, or in other words what is our part in being filled with the Holy Spirit. First, repentance. If there is anything wrong in our lives or even questionable, we must renounce it. Peter said to the inquiring multitude, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Doubtless, the days between Ascension and Pentecost were days of heart-searching for the apostles. I imagine, as the days wore on and the Comforter did not come, James and John standing up one day and saying, "Brethren, there is a little matter about which we wish to speak. You know how we tried to get the Master to promise us the two best places in his kingdom; we realize now it was a mean thing of us to do, and we wish to confess it. Brethren, will you forgive us?" Then we imagine Peter saying, "Beloved, you all know my sin. Now, I denied the Lord, and even swore that I never knew Him, though I had been with Him for three years. Can you, and will you, forgive me, for I fear that it is my sin that is keeping back the Comforter; and I can hear them, in my imagination, saying, Yes, brethren, we will forgive you." And this confession of some secret sin went on until finally they were all broken down in tears, and some one said, "Oh, let us pray!" And while they were all on their knees with one accord, "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." I tell you, beloved, when we are filled with that old-time pentecostal power, we will begin to tell it in such a way and manner that the people of the world will take knowledge of us—that we have been with Jesus.

What are the Conditions of Being Filled with the Holy Spirit?

First, repentance; second, obedience. "And we are His witnesses of these things; and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts 5:32). In order to be filled with the Holy Spirit, the believer must render to God absolute obedience, without questioning. Here is where many fall short of receiving the fullness of the Spirit. They say, "I would not dare give myself to God without reserve. He might send me to China as a missionary." True, but if He does, He will go with them and supply all needed grace. Here is where many falter and lose the blessing, because they cannot trust God to order their lives. And I wish to say I was no exception. Here is where I halted for a time. But, thanks be to God, I met the condition and promised God I would do what He wanted me to do; and it wasn't long until I was shown how I was to glorify God with my life, and when I said "Yes, I'll do what you want me to," that old gospel hymn had a different meaning to me that says, "Not for ease or worldly pleasure, nor for fame my prayer shall be; gladly will I toil and suffer, only let me walk with Thee."

Whenever we get to the place where we can utter the words of that song from our heart, then God can and will use us to glorify and magnify Him among the children of men. When Moses obeyed the Lord's command as to the construction of the tabernacle, then there came a cloud over and covered the tent, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. So it is with us, when the temples of our bodies are dedicated wholly and forever to His service, the glory of the Lord will fill the temple and take full possession. What are the conditions of being filled with the Spirit? First, repentance; second, obedience; third, faith. The Word tells us, "But without faith it is impossible to please Him." If we will read Luke 11:13 and Ephesians 5:18, these Scriptures will teach us that God will hold us accountable if we are not filled with the Spirit, and for all the good we might have done if we had been so filled. In Ephesians 5:18 it says, "And be not drunk with wine where is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." Oh! you will hear people say, I do not drink wine. Maybe not, but do you drink Coca-Cola? Do you use tobacco? Do you go to the theater? Do you engage in these worldly games? Oh! some will say there is no harm in those things. Oh, no! I will not agree with them on that point. Just let them alone or stay away from them, and no harm will come to you on account of any of these questionable things. If any one's influence is hurt, he is hurt spiritually. If God had been pleased for His children to engage in such practices He would not have had this Scripture recorded. "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Or this Scripture, "Love not the world; neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."

Many are traveling the broad way today on account of these little no-harm sins. But I declare unto you, dear readers, from the teachings of God's holy word, when one is truly converted and has had the upper-room experience, and as light dawns and is thrown across one's pathway, one will be like Paul, "I die daily," to these things that are detrimental to the spiritual growth. "John truly baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence" (Acts 1:5). May God add His blessing to this message.

MONDAY.

THE HIGH TYPE OF FAITH.

Read Dan. 3:16-28.

This is one of those stories of the Scripture which have kindled the imagination and awakened the admiration of the world for centuries. The world loves heroes. Here is courage at its best—courage both physical, and moral, not less moral because also physical.

These men, for conscience sake, risked their lives, their standing with the court, their reputation with their fellow-men. The finest feature of the whole heroic episode is not the defiance of a despot's will, in which we see the prophecy of a day when men's consciences shall be free; rather it is that attitude of the three witnesses which reveals the fact that their faith was not dependent upon the intervention of miracle. They believed in a present God—present and powerful. That is greatly to their credit. There is, however, a higher type of faith. They believed in right, regardless of their own safety.

How does our faith compare with theirs? Does it rest on answered prayer? Theirs did not. Thus they reasoned with themselves: "Our God may let us perish. That is as He wills. We may be reduced to cinders; even so, we will not sell our souls for mere circumstantial safety." There is courage, there is freedom, there is faith in its ultimate reaches!

TUESDAY.

THE PERILS OF AFFECTION.

"Behold, thy mother and brethren stand without, desiring to speak with thee."—Matt. 12:47-50.

Sometimes temptation comes to us through the beautiful and tender relations of life. Many a man has been deterred from duty by the enchantments of sentiment. Jesus was getting into a dangerous position with the Pharisees, and it so alarmed His family that they came to plead with Him.

Affection, that was blind to His true spiritual mission, the mother's solicitude and the fraternal concern of His brothers, all of these called to Him. Jesus turned aside with deeply stirred feelings. It was one of the hardest moments of His life. After all, all men and women were His brothers and sisters.

One of the most difficult things in the Christian life is to turn away from those who really love us, that we may continue our spiritual service even at the risk of being misunderstood by our own. Here is a Christian wife called to choose between Christ and the world; here is the youth who turns a deaf ear to the pleadings of ambitious parents for his career, that his missionary ideals may be accomplished. Sometimes a man's foes are truly those of his own household.

It is not always so, however. Many are sent and not detained by love. Bishop Simpson used to tell how he slept at the feet of his mother, waiting for the stage coach which was to take him away from her; how the mother struggled with her own heart to decide whether she should wake him or let him sleep and thus keep him longer. When the coach came over the hill, she touched him and let him go. God, give us grace to overcome the temptations of affection!

WEDNESDAY.

THE PRIVILEGE OF PRAYER.

"And when He had sent them away, He departed into a mountain to pray."—Mark 6:46-51.

So impressed were His followers with His ability to commune with the Heavenly Father that the one request recorded is not that He might teach them how to work miracles, or to form the Church, or to organize the kingdom, or how to preach; but rather the request, "Lord, teach us to pray." As we come closer to Him and catch more of His spirit, there will ever be that request springing from our lips.

Prayer is a high privilege accorded to us. God does not demand that we prostrate ourselves before Him, or come to Him with certain words, before He will bless us. No such interpretation is worthy of the God and Father revealed in Jesus Christ.

"Must I pray?" You may deprive yourself of this great blessing, fail to use the powers placed at your hands, live a life barren and meaningless. But you may pray. The way is open for you to come into contact with the unseen, to gather strength and see the meaning of life. Prayer is a high privilege, and you are inestimably the loser if you avail not yourself of this privilege.

Prayer.—O loving Father, we lift up our petition for all who work at honest toil to keep others happy and safe. For all the multitude of humble but stanch folk around the world, we pray Thy blessing and the reward for nobility that the world does not crown. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE LIFE OF FAITH.

"The just shall live by faith."—Gal. 3:11-13.

The life of faith is sustained by the things that are hoped for, rather than by the things already attained; for we are told that faith is "the substance of things hoped for." Abram went out seeking a city whose maker and builder is God. He had not already found it, so he looked for it by faith. And his life was sustained by the confident anticipation that he would one day find it.

This life of faith is sustained also by the things that are but of sight, rather than by those that can be verified in the world of sight and sense. Faith is "the evidence of things not seen." Jesus said to the disciples on one occasion, "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." He stated a fact which is always true of the life of faith. It feeds upon things that are hidden from the earth-bound sight of men.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

FRIDAY.

WHEN WE TRUST AND OBEY.

"Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."—Luke 5:4-11.

If the Christian Church depended on human strength alone, her career in this world would be short-lived indeed. A peculiar thing about the Church has ever been that when her members have tried to serve God in sincerity and truth, they have always been gifted with a power from on high enabling them to suffer and to endure beyond any strength of their own. How did Paul preach the gospel in a thousand cities? How did timid Peter become a hero? How did the martyrs defy death for the safe of the faith they loved? These people did all this with the power that God gives those who trust and obey. When they do what they can, He helps them to do better than they can.

Duty today may seem hard. The Master's commands may appear to be impossible of fulfillment. And yet, the situation is never as bad as it seems. Christ's goodness is unfailing. God's power is all-sufficient. If we do what we can, trusting Him, He will bless our efforts and enable us to perform that which now seems the impossible.

SATURDAY.

GOD'S OUT-OF-DOORS.

"He causeth the grass to grow."—Psa. 104:10-14.

There was one corner of the garden where nothing would grow, save a few varieties of noxious weeds and even they did not thrive. The soil was a heavy clay, containing little plant food, and under a hot sun it baked and dried quickly. This year we were surprised to find one spot of ground, almost three feet in diameter, on which good blue grass had taken root and prospered. There it was, a perfect circle of verdure, while all around it the earth was sterile. Digging down into the soil, we found the remnant of a galvanized iron tub. After some inquiries, the mystery was solved. Some few years before, a boy had dug a hole in the poor earth and it it he had sunk the tub. An eager fisherman, the lad one day gathered a great quantity of common earth worms from a field where men were plowing. These he had placed in the tub. The worms (who have been called God's humble plowmen) had aerated and transformed the earth.

Paul, in his letter to the Romans, says of the ancient world that it was without excuse, for God is manifest in His works. Even the worms are not without profit. They are God's workers in soil preparation; they help feed the cattle.

Prayer.—Our Heavenly Father, as we have known Thy truth and have come to see Thy ways, teach us to walk with Thee day by day, that we may not be lonesome when the shadows of age or the fear of death overpower us. May all fear be banished by perfect love. Amen.

SUNDAY.

HUMILITY HONORED.

"God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble."—James 4:6.

The loveliest, sweetest flower that blooms among the Christian virtues is the flower of humility. And humility is as becoming to the soul of man as the fragrance of that beautiful little flower. It is a grace so sweet that it tinges every other human virtue with its lustre, even as God's sweet dews cover the grasses of the field.

To the humble man, the very bowing of the head becomes a benediction. It brings relaxation and ease, it opens the floodgates of prayer and communion, it bestows the precious feeling of atonement and peace with God! But the proud man is tense, stiff; he becomes rebellious and arrogant; he strains his soul to carry his head so high, never content. Never submissive, the proud life is never in tune; it is full of jars and disharmonies!

Humanity opens a door toward God; pride closes it! Humility, like the lowly valleys, is laden with rich fruits; the high mountains are barren, God's grace falls like showers into the humble hearts; but the proud ones are as dry as dust. The humble enjoy perpetual peace; but in the heart of the proud is ever envy and frequent indignation. "He that exalteth himself shall be humbled; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Teacher of Hygiene: "Why must we always be careful to keep our houses clean and neat?"

Little Girl: "Because company may walk in at any moment."

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIEND:

The children at the Christian Orphanage had a very happy Thanksgiving. We always try to plan a good dinner for them on Thanksgiving Day. We had a number of kind friends who came to our rescue and contributed to help make the occasion happy and pleasant for them. Circle No. 4 of the Missionary Society of Burlington Christian Church sent us ten big fat hens. Circle No. 5 sent us eight large cakes. The Burlington Kiwanis Club sent us one barrel of nice apples and a crate of oranges. F. J. Strader Co., of Burlington, N. C., sent a nice bag of Irish potatoes. Durham Ice Cream Company sent us ten gallons of ice cream, and after adding such other things as the matron saw fit, we had a most excellent dinner and all the little tots were happy and delighted. A good chicken dinner, with apples, oranges and with ice cream to finish up with, always appeals to the children. We are grateful indeed for the kindnesses shown us to give the children a good dinner and a happy day. We only had one disappointment. One of our boys went out in the country rabbit hunting, and a wild turkey flew up just in front of him and he took a good aim with his old, trusty single-barrel gun that never fails to bring down, and as usual down came the turkey in a patch of tall weeds, and with a smile on his face and a happy heart with visions of baked turkey with all kinds of nice dressings piled around it, and with a nice bowl of nice pastry at his right hand, and all his chums around his table, he rushed forth to grab his prize, but to his utter disappointment the turkey was not there and could not be found. Frank has finally come to the conclusion that he was either dreaming or that the turkey can run when its wing is broken and it cannot fly.

Our Thanksgiving offering has passed the first thousand dollars. Let everybody get in line with faces to the front and push us up to the goal of ten thousand dollars. Just nine thousand to raise now. Let's raise it right quick.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Lesson XI—December 14, 1924.

Subject: "The Raising of Lazarus."

Golden Text: "I am the resurrection and the life."

Lesson: John 11:1-44.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 91:1-7.

The Master was a friendly fellow. And because He was friendly He had friends. There were those who rejoiced in His friendship, and there were those in whose friendship He rejoiced. And there were homes that were open to Him because of the rich, human fellowship of this man who is known as the Great Friend. The home at Bethany was such a home. The gospel records would indicate that Jesus often visited in this home, and they distinctly state that there was a fine friendship between the inmates of that home—Mary, Martha, and Lazarus—and Jesus. This friendship was mutual in a very human and a very real sense, but it was sanctified by the spirit of the divine friendship incarnate in Jesus Christ. Human friendship never reaches its highest levels until it is tinged and transformed by the divine friend.

Death had come into this home, as it comes into every home. One of the number (the brother) had been stricken down with a serious illness, and in a short time he died. The sisters, even while he was yet sick, sent for the Master, the great Physician. Somehow or other, humanity instinctively turns to Jesus in the hour of trouble, and especially in the hour of bereavement. Thrice happy is the man who has already learned to turn to Jesus before trouble comes, for he comes with a more vital faith and with a more valid claim.

The Master was seemingly indifferent. He made no effort to go immediately; He tarried yet two days in the place where He was. And two days is a long time when a loved one is critically ill. The sisters might well have wondered if their Lord was concerned. Here is a parable of life. When sorrow and bereavement come, we wonder whether He cares. We see no evidence that He does care. But the Father sees and knows and cares. And if we have faith and patience, He will work out His purposes and glorify His name. What mattered it even if Lazarus had died in the meantime! The Master of Life had his case in mind. He who keepeth Israel, neither slumbers nor sleeps.

The story embodies an interesting character-sketch. It shows the Master's courage. The Jews had sought to stone Him, and He was inviting violence to His person by appearing in Judea. But human need called Him, and to Him the call of human need was the call of God. He knew that no harm could come to Him who did the will of God. And even if physical harm did come, it could not be compared with the harm which comes from disobedience to the divine voice. Here was courage of the finest kind, and heroism that stands in a class by itself.

And there was Thomas—despondent, doubting Thomas. But when he saw that the Master was determined to go, he cast his lot with Him. "Let us go also, that we may die with Him," says this much-misunderstood disciple, and thus shows the stuff that manhood is made of. We can well afford to have more of Thomas' honest doubt if we could have more of his genuine courage.

Then there was Martha, still the same active Martha, feeling keenly the sorrow and pain, but going forth eagerly to meet Jesus. But Mary sat still in the house. Perhaps she had still chosen the better part. And her sincerity was shown by the fact that when the Master did come and call for her, she arose quickly and came unto Jesus.

The words of Jesus as he talked with Martha are immortal. Here was announced in an informal way and in simple language the message that has captured the imagination of millions and done more to dispel the spectre of death than any other words that have ever been spoken. Here is announced the great principle that life is ever master of death, and that love can never lose its own. Here is emphasized the fact that there are certain values in life that are preserved, and he who has a vital faith in Jesus Christ as the Son of God has that which makes him a child of eternity.

The words about Jesus as He stood before the tomb are just as immortal. They constitute the shortest verse in the Bible, but they are among the most cherished of that great Book. "Jesus wept." Here we feel the heart-throbs of the divine and see His attitude toward His children in their hours of grief and need. It is significant that the book of John which was written to exalt the divinity of Jesus, should include this touch which most effectively attests to His humanity. He who suffers and grieves may be assured that he is an object of love and sympathy in the mind and heart of the Father.

There are few more dramatic scenes in the Bible than the one where Jesus stands before the grave of Lazarus. Within the tomb, dark, cold and silent, lay the body of a man already four days dead. Within stood a man, embodying in His character the more abundant life. The issue was plain. The battle was joined. It was, in a sense, a moment when the great test was to be made. The Master's reputation and His right to the moral and spiritual leadership of the race were at stake. If He failed here, He could not hope to win elsewhere. And He knew that. Accordingly, He besought the Father, as was His usual custom, and then cried in a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth!" And, behold! he that was dead came forth; came forth alive. Thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Some Teaching Points.

1. Jesus Christ adds dignity to human friendships.
2. God's love is personal.
3. Misfortunes may be a means of glorifying God.
4. Nothing really matters except to love in Him.
5. God is concerned over human sorrow.
6. Humanity instinctively turns to God in the hour of calamity and need.
7. The Father responds to the call of His children, but the response may be delayed.
8. Duty takes precedence over danger.
9. Some sorrow cannot be expressed; it is simply felt.
10. Eternal life comes through Jesus Christ.
11. A living faith in Christ is the most vital thing in life.
12. He who lives in Christ never dies.
13. The Master's call is a personal call.
14. A true test of discipleship is the way in which we respond to the Master's call.
15. He who wept at the tomb of Lazarus enters into our sorrows.
16. Faith makes possible miracles.
17. The secret of Jesus' power was His absolute trust in and obedience to the Father.
18. He who will do the will of God will have the power of God.
19. It takes the divine power to save from death; but the human factor is needed.
20. Jesus Christ saves because He frees.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic: "Count and Share Your Blessings."

Scripture Lesson: "Freely ye have received, freely give."—Psa. 107:1-9.

Daily Readings: M., Dec. 8—Psa. 103:1-13, Remembered blessings. T., Dec. 9—Deut. 29:1-9, The past reviewed. W., Dec. 10—Psa. 65:9-13, Blessings of Harvest. T., Dec. 11—Deut. 15:7-11, Open heart and hand. F., Dec. 12—Matt. 6:19-21, Treasure in heaven. S., Dec. 13—1 Tim. 6:17-19, Real riches. S., Dec. 14—Psa. 107:1-9, Count and share your blessings.

A retrospective view of our received blessings is a mighty good habit for one to get into. When everything seems to go wrong, if we would just think for a moment of the times when things were bright and happy we could soon clear the clouds, replacing them with sunshine. If there were no pains, we could not appreciate happy moments. "Without the refreshing showers, there could be no May flowers."

We should not only review our past blessings, but we should remember them each day as we go about doing our bit in this big world.

There cannot be simply a selfish enjoyment of blessings. Blessings bring smiles, and smiles speak a universal language. Blessings that are not counted are lost; also blessings that are not shared cease to be blessings that go to increase life's happiness. We do not live alone, and we cannot keep our blessings selfishly for ourselves and be happy.

There would be more devout followers of our Father and Creator if we, in these busy days, would stop to review His blessings bestowed upon us unworthy creatures. And of the promise of more blessings should serve as an incentive to do and be more for Him who is the giver of all good and perfect gifts.

We may be a means of blessings for some one who is less fortunate than we in earthly possessions, or even enough to give comfort. Our lives should always serve as a channel of God's blessings.

THE C. M. A. TO MEET.

The good people of the Rosemont Christian Church are ready for 200 delegates, which they hope will attend the Christian Missionary Association, to meet with them December 9, 1924.

Take Money Point car at Union Station; get off at Rosemont Stop. There will be a welcome address and response, and a blessing asked when we eat. See The Sun for the program. Come! We will be waiting and ready to receive you in "Southern style."

LISTEN, DEARS:

You remember that I once told you about a dear little orphan at the Elon Orphanage who had been adopted by a whole Sunday School class in the Burlington Christian Church? You remember? Goody! Well, I have something else to tell you about that lucky little girl. One day last week the class sent her a whole box full of nice warm, warm clothes to wear, and a beautiful coat, all made with a pretty collar and a shiney inside. Oh-ee! (It was made out of a beautiful grown-up coat, and so now it is as new as can be, since it is a little girl's coat.) And there was a green dress for little Lillie Mae. Yes, that's her name. You have'nt forgotten it either, have you? The green dress had red braid all over it, until really your editor wished she was little 'nuff to wear it herself, or one just like it, for we wanted Lillie Mae to wear this one her own dear little self.

Then after a few days Mr. Johnston wrote all the ladies in the Sunday School class a letter, and what do you 'spose he said? Why, you see the dress and coat got to Lillie Mae on Saturday, and the next day she dressed up in all her new clothes and went to Sunday School. My! how happy she was.

I didn't tell you about all the other things in that box, but it was full of nice warm, clean clothes. So Lillie Mae is the little orphan girl that will keep warm this winter. Jack Frost can't get her, can he? Your editor,

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

A YOUNG HERO.

One afternoon, almost a century and a half ago, three lads were idling along a country lane in Ireland.

"Come on, let's go swimming," said one.

"Oh, yes," chimed in the second, tossing his cap into the air. "Come on, Arthur. You haven't any objections, have you?"

The lad called Arthur, a blue-eyed, freckled-faced fellow, with a shock of brown hair that covered his high forehead, hesitated briefly before he answered.

"No, I haven't any objections, and I think a swim would do us all good, but we promised old man Goodhue that we would hoe his garden for him, and should keep our word."

"Oh, come on, don't be a ninny, Arthur. As if you, an earl's son, would hoe a poor man's garden."

"But we promised," replied Arthur, "and besides, he is an old soldier, and I mean to be a soldier, too, and a soldier must always do his duty."

"Oh, pshaw! as if it was your duty to care for an old man's garden. I am going to the river."

"And I am going to keep my word. I can have my swim afterwards."

"Well, I wish you joy in your task," shouted the others as they kept on their course to the swimming hole, where the boys of Dublin School were used to take their weekly swim.

The boy called Arthur turned in at the rustic gate of a poor cottage, where an old man with a crutch and a wooden leg greeted him.

"Well, you have not forgotten the old soldier. Some boys would."

"I try to keep my word on all occasions, and I could not forget a man who lost his legs at Culloden."

The old man gazed at the proud face and grave eyes of the boy, and something that he saw there made him say, "My lad, you will be a great man some day."

The boy's face flushed. Praise from an old soldier was very pleasant. "But I want to be a great soldier like Marlborough."

"Well, if you are a soldier you will be great, too. Determination, hard work and faithfulness to duty will help any one to succeed."

With these encouraging words lingering in his ear, the boy stripped off his coat and vest and went to work. It was toil he was unaccustomed to, and before an hour's time his hands were sore. But he worked on with a brave spirit till the task was done.

* * * * *

That very afternoon that same student, Arthur, as he was returning from his belated swim in the river, showed himself a hero of another kind.

A carriage, driven by a coachman in livery, was dashing along one of the streets of Dublin. Suddenly the leading horse took fright. In the driver's attempt to hold in the frantic steeds, one of the reins snapped, and the coachman sat dazed and helpless in his seat.

A glimpse of a young girl's face, pale with terror, and that of a middle-aged gentleman, evidently her father, and the frightened, tearing horses, and the heavy coach lurching dangerously from side to side, was enough to set Arthur's feet aflying.

Darting swiftly across the street, the lad rushed out in front of the galloping horses. A leap like that of a blood-hound and he had the frightened animals by the bridle.

He was lifted from his feet, but he clung like grim death. He could not be shaken off. Dragged forcibly along, he did not relinquish his grasp, and at last succeeded in checking their mad pace.

In a few minutes more they came to a halt, and as the coachman and outriders sprang to the ground, the coach door opened and the gray-eyed gentleman and the girl alighted. The gentleman said in surprise:

"Why, if this is not my friend Lord Morington's son! You have saved our lives and proved yourself a hero. I am Lord Longford, and this is my daughter, Catherine Pakenham.

"Young man, I predict great things for you. England will not hold your fame," and as he marked the lad's flushing eyes he placed his hand upon the boy's head as if pronouncing a benediction, "and dying you will sleep with England's great men."

These words all came true, for young Arthur became the Duke of Wellington, field marshal, conqueror of Napoleon and peer of the realms, who was accorded honors beyond those given to any other of England's heroes.

Great victories were to be his, great honors and moments of supreme exaltation, but never in a life that was destined to touch the summit of earthly glory did he show greater manhood than in keeping his word with Master Goodhue, nor did he ever perform a braver deed than when he saved the life of his future wife at the risk of his own.—Ex.

SANTA CLAUS' RECORD.

Santa Claus has been working hard all day, and now he sat dozing by the fire. His pipe had dropped from his mouth, and he was almost asleep when a voice said: "Wake up, Santa. Didn't you know Thanksgiving has passed, and it will soon be Christmas? The letters have begun to come already, and we have not been over your list."

Santa picked up his pipe and looked at the little creature standing on his knee. It was the fairy who seeks out the very good children and tells Santa about them, and I am very sorry to write, also the naughty girls and boys. Santa Claus took a book from a closet and dusted it, and when he had laid it on the table before him he opened it and began to read:

"A—Abbott, Allen, Ashley—" "Oh, the A's are all good this year," interrupted the fairy. "I am sorry, though, that the Benson children have quarreled terribly."

"But they have a month in which to improve," said Santa. "I'll put a faint mark beside their names."

"C, D and E are all good," said the fairy; "but the Fuller boy ran away from school."

"Bad, very bad," said Santa, shaking his head. "I shall have to put one black mark there. G's," he asked; "how are they?"

"All good," said the fairy, "but in the H line the Hill girl—the oldest one—did not help her mother willingly last Saturday."

"But she may do better next Saturday," said Santa; "I will wait before I mark her name."

"The next three letters are all good," the fairy told him; "but the Lawton girl did not practice at all last Saturday; she went out to play and did not come in until dinner-time."

"Oh, dear, I am sorry for that," said Santa, tapping on the table with his pencil. "How about the M's?" "I am going to give the naughty ones a chance," said the fairy; "they were not very bad, and there are no more marks until you get to the T's. The Taylor boy, the oldest one, would not let his little brother play with him last week, and this summer the Thompson boy took bird's eggs."

"They will have to have a black mark, both of them; but I will make them very light, for, as I said before, there is a month for improvement. U, V," said Santa.

The fairy held up her hand. "The W's," she said, "have so many marks that I dread to tell you. The Wheeler boy told a fib this summer about swimming, and the youngest Wilson girl plagued her big sister when she had company, and the Walton boys took apples from a tree that did not belong to them, and the Wright—"

"Oh, dear, do not tell me any more," said Santa, closing his book; "I think I'll rub out all marks and begin from now. You come next week and we will go through the list again, and from then the marks will count. I really think it must be very hard to be good every minute a whole year. I'll give the kiddies a chance."

The fairy looked at him slyly and laughed.

"Why do you laugh?" asked Santa.

"I was thinking," said the fairy, "that you probably remembered how it was when you were a boy."

"No," replied Santa; "I have always been an old man, but I have known many boys and girls, too," he added.

"Good-night," called the fairy as she disappeared up the chimney.

"Good-night," answered Santa Claus; "see you next week."

SHALL WE COMMIT SUICIDE?

taneously a quarter of a million men, together with all their requirements, conitnuously forward across country in mechanical vehicles moving ten or fifteen miles each day. Poison gases of incredible malignity, against which only a secret mask (which the Germans could not obtain in time) was proof, would have stifled all resistance and paralyzed all life on the hostile front subjected to attack. No doubt, the Germans, too, had their plans. But the hour of wrath had passed. The signal of relief was given, and the horrors of 1919 remained buried in the archives of the great antagonists.

Their projects were put aside unfinished, unexecuted; but their knowledge was preserved; their data, calculations and discoveries were hastily bundled together and docketed "for future reference" by the war offices in every country. The campaign of 1919 was never fought; but its ideas go marching along. In every army they are being explored, elaborated, refined under the surface of peace, and should war come again to the world it is not with the weapons and agencies prepared for 1919 that it will be fought, but with developments and extensions of these which will be incomparably more formidable and fatal.

Mankind has never been in this position before. Without having improved appreciably in virtue or enjoying wiser guidance, it has got into its hands for the first time the tools by which it can unfailingly accomplish its own extermination. Death stands at attention, obedient, expectant, ready to serve, ready to shear away the peoples en masse; ready, if called on, to pulverize without hope of repair, what is left of civilization.

The New Crisis.

Let it not be thought for a moment that the danger of another explosion in Europe is passed. The causes of war have been in no way removed; indeed, they are in some respects aggravated by the so-called peace treaty and the reactions following thereupon. A vista opens out of electrical rays which could paralyze the engines of a motor car, could claw down aeroplanes from the sky, and conceivably be made destructive of human life or human vision. Then there are explosives. Has science turned its last page on them? May there not be methods of using explosive energy incomparably more intense than anything heretofore discovered? Might not a bomb no bigger than an orange be found to possess a secret power to destroy a whole block of buildings—nay, to concentrate the force of a thousand tons of cordite and blast a township at a stroke? Could not explosives even of the existing type be guided automatically in flying machines by wireless or other rays, without a human pilot, in ceaseless procession upon a hostile city, arsenal, camp or dockyard?

As for poison gas and chemical warfare in all of a terrible book. Certainly every one of these its forms, only the first chapter has been written new avenues to destruction is being studied on both sides of the Rhine, with all the science and patience of which man is capable. And why should it be supposed that these resources will be limited to inorganic chemistry? A study of disease—of pestilences methodically prepared and deliberately launched upon man and beast—is certainly being pursued in the laboratories of more than one great country. Blight to destroy crops, anthrax to slay horses and cattle, plague to poison not armies only, but whole districts—such are the lines along which military science is remorselessly advancing.

In barbarous times, superior martial virtue—physical strength, courage, skill, discipline—were required to secure a supremacy; and in the hard evolution of mankind the best and fittest stocks came to the fore. But no such saving guarantee exists today. There is no reason why a base, degenerate, immoral race should not make an enemy far above them in quality the prostrate subject of their caprice or tyranny, simply because they happened to be possessed at a given moment of some new death-dealing or terror-working process and were ruthless in its employment.

The Peril of the Future.

Such, then, is the peril with which mankind menaces itself. Means of destruction incalculable in their effects, wholesale and frightful in their character, and unrelated to any form of human merit; the march of science unfolding ever more appalling possibilities; and the fires of hatred burning deep in the hearts of some of the greatest peoples of the world, fanned by continual provocation and unceasing fear and fired by the deepest sense of national wrong or national danger! On the other hand, there is the blessed respite of exhaustion, offering to the nations a final chance to control their destinies and avert what may well be a general doom.

Against the gathering, but still distant, tempest the League of Nations, deserted by the United States, scorned by Soviet Russia, flouted by Italy, distrusted equally by France and Germany, raises feebly but faithfully its standards of sanity and hope. Its structure, airy and unsubstantial, framed of shining but too often visionary idealism, is in its present form incapable of guarding the world from its dangers and of protecting mankind from itself. Yet it is through the League of Nations alone that the path of safety and salvation can be found. To sustain and aid the League of Nations is the duty of all. To reenforce it and bring it into vital and practical relation with actual world-politics by sincere agreements and understanding between the great powers, between the leading races, should be the first aim of all who wish to spare their children torments and disasters compared to which those we have suffered will be but a pale preliminary. —Federal Council Bulletin.

RIGSBEE.

Mrs. Martha Rigsbee was born September, 1845; died, October 22, 1924. Many years ago she united with Turner's Chapel Church, and ever after lived a consistent Christian life, loyal to her Church and faithful to her Master. Kind-hearted and considerate of the happiness and comfort of others, she had many friends, who are saddened by her departure, but rejoice in the hope of meeting her again.

She is survived by two sons, Hal and Elwood Rigsbee; three daughters, Mrs. Alton Wicker, Mrs. Lottie Cooper, and Mrs. Winfred Wicker, besides several grandchildren.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

VERY FAIR AND AMERICAN TO BE SURE.

The "Christian Century," an alleged religious weekly of no particular connections, whose mission seems to be the handling of those idea-seeking, thought-shirking clergymen whom the "Nation" and the "New Republic" shock too much, voices this patriotic sentiment:

"No man who values freedom of opinion and speech has any business in an army officer's uniform, just as no Christian minister whose first allegiance is to Jesus Christ, has any business in an army officer's uniform. An army, whether in time of peace or in time of war, is just the sort of thing that can exist only by the partial unmanning of the manhood of those who participate in it."

There seems to be a great deal of freedom of opinion and speech in that paragraph, which the records of our nation show was won and is protected by men in uniform. Why this bitter anti-Americanism of lily-fingered, but rough-speaking clerics? Are they bent on succeeding the "parlor anarchist" with a pulpit anarchist?

In any case, it is instructive to watch the steady alienizing of a section of the American pulpit, and the adroitness with which the Church's base is moved about in agreement with the exigencies of alien propaganda.

BUHRER—PETTY.

A home wedding of unusual interest was solemnized when Mr. Paul Buhrer, of Freemont, Ohio, and Miss Lois Petty, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Petty, were united in marriage. The vows were taken in the living-room, which had been most effectively decorated in green and white, and were heard by Dr. James H. Buhrer, pastor of the First Reformed Church of Washington, D. C., and father of the groom, assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland, pastor of the bride.

The bridemaids—Misses Clara Gant and Edna Buhrer—the dame of honor, Mrs. Reynolds Blackwell, and the maid of honor preceded the bride, who was given in marriage by her father. She was met at the altar by the groom, accompanied by his best man, Mr. Jos. McNeill.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in honor of the bridal party. Mrs. Buhrer is most popularly known in Greensboro, is a graduate of Goucher College, and for the past year has been connected with the city's welfare work. Mr. Buhrer is a graduate of John Hopkins University and is connected with the National Carbon Company, of Fremont, Ohio, where the young couple will make their home. May the blessings of heaven attend their lives.

Presbyterians Support Outsiders.—

The session of the Presbyterian Church at Buffalo, N. Y., is the custodian of a rather strange bequest. Some years ago a member of the Buffalo Presbyterian Church died, leaving a fund for the support of ministers receiving inadequate salaries within the jurisdiction of the Buffalo Presbytery without regard to denomination. As things have come about, the session is spending most of the income from the trust fund to supplement the salaries of ministers other than those in the Presbyterian Church.

Dealing with Overchurching.—

The officers of the various denominations are hard at work on the problem of overchurched districts. The Methodists of North Dakota have agreed to withdraw their work from several fields, leaving them to Presbyterians, while the Presbyterian Church reciprocates in several others. North Dakota is leading, it seems, in coping with this genuine problem.

The problem of the overchurched district is a very real one, while one-seventh of the town and country places in America have no Church facilities at all. There is much work which needs to be done, and the denominations are coming to see that competitive work does not pay, and are turning, we hope, their efforts into the many needy fields, for there is much work to do.

A Strange Amendment.—

In these days of income and inheritance taxes it is a strange amendment which Florida has just added to its constitution, making such taxes in that State forever impossible. In prohibiting the imposition of income and inheritance taxes, Florida is making a bid for population and, what one of its papers is pleased to call, "cheap money." A Cleveland paper is of the opinion that Florida has sold its birthright for a mess of pottage, just as Nevada did in its establishment of the Reno divorce court. Florida and Alabama are the only two States which have never imposed an inheritance tax. It will be interesting to note the results of the Florida constitutional amendment. The State seems to be in no need for money. Its entire State debt is only six hundred thousand, which it owes to the educational fund, and it has a large balance in the treasury.

An Idea in Religious Education.—

The Hammond Avenue Presbyterian Church, Superior, Wis., is succeeding with a week-day school of religion. Without waiting for the public school authorities to grant time off, the Church organized a week-day school of religion. On Thursday afternoons, at 3:45 o'clock, the children come to the Church for a light luncheon of cocoa and sandwiches, and at 4 the school begins. After a forty-five-minute period, the entire school is assembled, with the exception of the kindergarten, and at 5 the school is dismissed. The school is a carefully graded one from the kindergarten to the eighth grade; ten teachers are employed from the upper class of the State Normal School and are paid one dollar a week. The money is provided by a young ladies' auxiliary of the Church. The young women are enthusiastic over the success of the school; and well they might be, for on just an average Thursday recently there were 120 present and 16 absent. The school is two years' old. Last year, volunteer teachers were used, but better results can, of course, be obtained with paid teachers and those trained for the work of teaching.

It is a fine idea this of the Hammond Avenue Church, and one which many a Church could adopt where there is a school available from which to draw students.

Negro Elected Judge.—

Albert Bailey George, a negro, has been elected municipal judge of Chicago on the Republican ticket. George has an excellent record, and his election is greeted by white and colored voters alike in Chicago as a victory for tolerance and an application of the true spirit of democracy. There are but about sixty thousand negro voters in Chicago, and George's plurality over his nearest opponent was more than seventy-eight thousand, which marks it as distinctly not a negro victory, but declares plainly that the voters of Chicago based their judgment of the man not on the color of his skin, but on his fitness for the place. George was born in Washington, D. C., in 1873 of parents about 50 per cent white blood on both sides. He graduated from the public and high school there, and from Northwestern University law school in 1897. Since that time he has applied himself assiduously to the practice of law in his small, book-littered office. His record is in every respect irreproachable, and he is not aligned with the politicians, but stood on his merit. His candidacy was endorsed by the bar association of the city of Chicago. George is not the first Negro to occupy the bench, but the instances are rare. He will probably sit in a court where most of those appearing before him will be of his own color.

For Closer Co-Operation.—

Dr. Charles Chalmers MacLean, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Batavia, N. Y., used Armistice Day to plead for a closer co-operation between Catholics and Protestants. Dr. MacLean said in part: "The hour has struck for Protestants and Catholics to do a great deal of thinking. It is in co-operation as friends rather than in hostility as enemies that we can succeed in making our nation what it ought to be. We differ in some of our religious convictions, but in the great majority of things we are very much alike. Then, why not submerge our lesser differences in the vaster loyalties and convictions of which we are capable?"

Dr. MacLean also said: "It is possible for the Christian Churches of the world to outlaw war if they become united in this great endeavor. The Church knows that war is essentially and inherently wrong. If she gives her allegiance to the things which make for international peace, she will be instrumental in ushering in the golden day when the sword shall be beaten into plowshares."

Whether or not we agree with Dr. MacLaren, there is in his words food for thought—thought which might fruit in a better application of the principles of Jesus to life; thought which might contribute ultimately to spiritual grace to walk with Him along the road of service to mankind.

Egyptian Situation Perilous.—

During the last week of November, a party of natives attacked General Sir Lee Stack, the head of the British forces in Egypt, and General Stack has succumbed to his wounds. The murder is thought to have been committed by some of the Nationalistic party, who have been demanding a larger portion of self-government for Egypt, the withdrawal of British troops, a control of the Sudan, and what amounts to a virtual control of the Suez Canal. The murder may result in a more rigorous policy toward Egypt, and a revocation of the act which withdrew the British protectorate in Egypt in 1922 and made Egypt an independent power, with King Fuad as ruler. The Egyptian Premier is just back in Cairo, where the murder of General Stack occurred, from an unsuccessful interview with former Premier Ramsay MacDonald.

General Allenby has laid an ultimatum before the Egyptian government, demanding an adequate apology, an indemnity of five hundred thousand pounds, and a withdrawal of Egyptian troops from the Sudan. All these have been granted by Premier Zagloul, and King Fuad has issued a proclamation deploring the incident. The murderers will, of course, be severely punished. In the meantime, General Allenby has given orders for the expulsion of the Egyptian forces from the Sudan which have not been withdrawn. The French and Italian governments have been sounded on the matter, and they apparently offer no opposition to the proposed British policy. The British garrison at Malta has been ordered to Egypt, and the British fleet stationed at Alexandria has been materially strengthened.

Our Orphanage has cared for 246 children in all. Of these, 137 have gone out into the various walks and works of life with the training of the Orphanage to aid them, and 109 are now being cared for and trained for life.

Have you individually, then your Church, your Sunday School, you collectively, sent in your Thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage? Superintendent Johnston set the goal at $10,000, and he ought not to be disappointed, as every dollar of the amount is needed to carry on effectually this noble work of charity.

A revival is in progress at Elm Avenue Church, Portsmouth, Rev. V. T. Crawford, pastor. The Sunday School in this Church has recently put on a campaign to add a hundred new members in thirty days, and it seems as if the school will achieve its goal. Read the plan followed, as given by the pastor in another column.

Has your Church taken the Thanksgiving offering for the Orphanage? And was every member in the Church given an opportunity to contribute something? The Orphanage should have every penny of the $10,000 Superintendent Johnston is asking of this offering. It takes money to feed, clothes, care for and educate 109 children. Let's all of us give something now to the Christian Orphanage.

Baptists in North Carolina Church work spent $3,365,416.82 during the fiscal year ended December 3d, it was announced by Dr. Charles W. Maddry, secretary of the State Baptist Board of Missions. Commenting upon the results of this year's work and contributions, the secretary said that this year has been the greatest period of achievement in all the ninety-four years of the history of the North Carolina organization.

GREENSBORO LIONS ENTERTAIN.

Twenty-seven of the best-known ministers of Greensboro, N. C., followed the example of Daniel Thursday evening last, when they entered the Lions' den and took part in a very interesting and amusing program. The ministers were guests of the Lions' Club, and while they were assigned more or less ridiculous subjects, they handled them ably and convinced the Lions that Greensboro ministers are just folks who, like ordinary humans, possess a sense of humor.

One minister from each denomination spoke, and each entered into the spirit of the occasion. Dr. C. H. Rowland represented First Christian Church, and spoke on "The Drumstick as a Community Asset from the Preacher's Standpoint."

POUNDED.

Just after a splendid Thanksgiving service at New Lebanon Christian Church, in which many took part, giving expression of thanks for the many blessings of God, both temporal and spiritual, the pastor was asked to remain in for a few minutes. I was wondering what was going to take place, with as much patience as possible. I was then invited out and escorted to my Ford by Bro. Will Tom Moore, and as I looked in at the supplies the good people of the Church had loaded on my car, others came up and handed me money.

That was not all, for about 7 P. M. other members of the Church came to my home, bringing other good things for the pantry. For this kind remembrance of these good people I cannot find words to express my gratitude for this good thanksgiving surprise. May our rich Heavenly Father continue His blessing unto them.

J. W. Knight.

AN APPRECIATION.

Will you please allow me space in the columns of The Christian Sun to offer appreciation and thanks to the good people of Arab, Ala., and surrounding community for the pounding given us on the 12th of November, beginning at about 6 o'clock and lasting until 7 o'clock?

We wish to thank our many friends for their kindness in co-operating in the pounding, and words cannot express our appreciation for so many nice things to eat and wear, and also the nice purse extended to me by fraternal orders; and beside these there was some money given us by those who did not belong to any.

I believe I will say, and I think it safe to do so, that the amount of supplies and money given us would amount to $60.00 to $75.00. The people have been wonderfully good to us during the past year.

May the blessings of God go with these good people all along the journey of life, even unto the end. There were one hundred and three names handed to me, which I expect to keep; but I will not ask for space to print them; they are members from the Methodist, Baptist and Primitive Baptist and Christian Churches.

I pray that God may ever keep us humble, and that we may ever be thoughtful of others more than ourselves. W. T. Meacham.

WINCHESTER, VA.

Our special series of evangelistic meetings at the First Christian Church were held November 16 to 30, 1924. The Church was assisted in these meetings by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Leonard Davis, of Norfolk, Va., who reached us on Sunday afternoon, November 16th, and took charge of the musical part of the services that night. There was a splendid interest and a good attendance in this first service, and the interest and attendance increased with each succeeding service.

Mr. Davis, as all who have heard him know, is simply wonderful at the piano, and of course captivated his audience with the very first selection and held the interest as long as he was in our city. Mrs. Davis, though young in the work of directing music in such campaigns, made a very fine impression on our people, and did a mighty fine piece of work, and I bespeak for her a most successful career in this most essential work of directing evangelistic singing. Her solos, too, were very much enjoyed, and tactfully selected, and the accompaniment for these by Mr. Davis was all that could be desired. I hope that these efficient workers will be kept busy in their chosen field, as they are most certainly a great asset to any evangelistic campaign.

The preaching during the campaign was done by the pastor, Mr. Morgan, who delivered some great messages, all of which met with a splendid response. As a result, there have been received into Church to date twenty new members, with several others who will join later.

The meeting was the best ever held in our Church here, and the Church feels much encouraged. For all these blessings we most humbly thank God and give to Him the glory.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

With the adoption of messages of fellowship to Churches of America and foreign countries, the Federal Council of Churches, on Tuesday, brought to a close its fifth quadrennial meeting.

A section of President Coolidge's recent message to Congress, asserting that "America has definitely relinquished the old standard of dealing with other countries by terror and force and is definitely committed to the new standard of dealing with them through friendship and understanding," was approved by the council.

In its message to the Churches of America, the council declared all denominations are for the "pacific settlement" of all international disputes. "Outlawry of war" through the development of "international agencies for bringing aggressor agencies under the collective moral condemnation of the world" also was urged.

A greater degree of fellowship in industrial and economic life and among races was called for in the prohibition law by the State and Federal governments was asked.

The message to foreign Churches expressed sympathy and a desire to be of help to them in their work. All matters in the report of the committee on army and navy chaplains requiring immediate attention were approved by the council, while special details were referred to a committee of twelve to report to the executive committee next year.

Charges that chaplains, approved by their denominational committees, have been dismissed from the service because they claimed liberty of speech and action as citizens were denied in the report of the committee on army and navy chaplains submitted to the Federal Council of Churches. Allegations that several chaplains had been discharged because of expressed opposition to "defense day" were received by the committee, one official said, and the report denied their truth. The report added that the committee understood that a chaplain in no way renounced his freedom as a citizen or as a preacher when he entered the service, but asked that the Secretary of War give a ruling.

A copy of Sir Walter Raleigh's "History of the World," printed in London in 1634, has been presented to the State Hall of History by Eric Norden, Wilmington, it was learned today. The copy was from the first edition of the book. The book was written by Sir Walter Raleigh during his long years in the tower of London as a State prisoner. It is in a remarkable state of preservation.

THE CENTRAL ACT OF RELIGION.

Religion is too rich and complex to be reduced to any one act or attitude or aspect of life. In so far as our religion is real and genuine, it will touch, heighten, and transform every feature of our lives, and, if that is so, we must not expect that we can pick out one feature and say here or nowhere the consummate blossom of religion is to be seen. But there is one act of life which does bring us in a special and peculiar way into the holy of holies of religion—a central act, without which any person's religion will always remain dwarfed and unfulfilled. This central act is worship. By worship we mean the act of rising to a personal, experimental consciousness of the real presence of God which floods the soul with joy and bathes the whole inward spirit with refreshing streams of life. Never to have felt that, never to have opened the life to these incoming divine tides, never to have experienced the joy of personal fellowship with God, is surely to have missed the richest privilege and the highest beatitude of religion. Almost all of our modern forms of Christianity make too little of this central act, and, with some truth, it has been called "the lost art of worship." The main reason for the decline of worship is the excessive desire, so common today, to have something always happening, or, as we often say, to have something "doing." Hush, waiting, meditation, concentration of spirit, are just the reverse of our busy, driving, modern temper. The person who meditates, we are apt to think, will lose an opportunity to do something; while he muses, the procession will go on and leave him behind. We hear all the time of the vast human tasks that are to be done; we are crowded with practical problems, and some of us are ready to identify religion with service; we would like to turn the Church into a soup-house, or at least into an institution for ministering to the wants of the neighborhood.

Another tendency into which we easily fall is that of making religion consist of words, words, words. Talking about God, expounding the experiences of them of old time, saying apt and lovely things about religion, occupy us much when we come together, and quite rightly so. But to what purpose do we "talk about God" if none of us can pause in our inward rush and find Him, actually meet with Him and enter into the joy of the Lord? What have we gained by recounting the "experiences" of past ages if nobody now is to have similar experiences? It is melancholy to hear of Bethels in the dim, far past if we are to conclude that that ladder between the soul and God has been pulled up, or pulled down, and that direct divine intercourse has ceased. The apt and lovely words about religion have place and meaning only if they create in us the passion and the positive intention to go ourselves on the spiritual pilgrimage, the goal of which is this holy of holies, where words about God fall away, since we have entered into the joy of his real presence.

In the right place and in the proper degree we may well consider what are the great truths of our religion, what are the structural ideas of our faith, and it is essential that we should work out, and work out intelligently, the ways and means, the plans and methods, of social service—the practical application of our spiritual insight to the society of our time—but in all these matters do not let us make the fatal mistake of supposing that religion is primarily either words or service. Religion is primarily, and at heart, the personal meeting of the soul with God. If that experience ceases in the world, religion, in its first intention, is doomed. We may still have ideas about the God whom men once knew intimately, and we may still continue to work for human betterment, but there can be living religion only so long as the soul of man is capable of experiencing the fresh bubbling of the living water within and can know for himself that a heart of eternal love beats in the central deeps of the universe within his reach.

To give up the cultivation of worship, then, means, in the long run, the loss of the central thing in religion; it involves the surrender of the priceless jewel of the soul. In its stead, we may perfect many other things; we may make our form of divine service, as we call it, very artistic and very popular; we may speak with the tongues of men and sing with the tongues almost of angels, but if we lose the power to discover and appreciate the real presence of God and if we miss the supreme joy of feeling ourselves environed by the Spirit of the living and present God, we have made a bad exchange and have dropped from a higher to a lower type of religion.

There is no doubt that, as with all the supremely great things, the act of worship calls for intense devotion, for unusual concentration, for long-continued spiritual preparation. If it is, as we believe, the very goal and pinnacle of religion—the flowering of the tree of life—then we must not expect that it will cost us nothing or that it will be reached along lines of least resistance. Religion has always demanded, for its best things, the absolute price. There is no finding without losing; there is no getting without giving; there is no living without dying. For a few dollars we can get a book on religion; for a few more dollars we can get some one to talk to us about the things of religion; but what we cannot get for dollars, however high we heap them, is this experience which is the heart of religion, this experience of God, this practice of the divine presence, this joy of being ourselves in the holy of holies.—R. M. J., in Christian Work.

LARGE OUTLAY FOR NEGRO SCHOOLS.

North Carolina is now appropriating for negro education nearly four million dollars a year, a sum greater than the State expended for its entire educational program, white and colored, in any year prior to 1910. This was the startling statement made by Prof. N. C. Newbold, of the State department of education at the annual conference on negro education held in Raleigh a few days ago.

During the past four years the State has expended $15,000,000 for the education of its colored citizens, and is preparing to appropriate as much more for this purpose in the four years just ahead, according to Prof. Newbold, who heads the department of negro education. Eleven years ago the total appropriated for this purpose was $225,000 a year. The increase, therefore, has been about 1,500 per cent. Of the four-year budget, $2,200,000 went for higher education. Colored high schools have increased in number from thirteen in 1921 to thirty-four in 1924, and high school students from 1,347 to 5,341. The number of colored teachers has increased in four years from 3,779 to 5,037. The salaries paid these teachers during the four years aggregate about seven million dollars.

The greatest need for the immediate future, Mr. Newbold declared, is a standard four-year teacher's college, which he thought would be provided by the next Legislature. After that must come a four-year standard college of liberal arts.

Both races, said Mr. Newbold, are coming to realize the need for colored doctors, lawyers, nurses, and other professionally trained leaders. "North Carolina has faith in its negro people," he continued; "it has spent millions for their education, and it believes that there should be one standard for teachers and not two. There is still much left to be done if we live up to the doctrine of equity of educational opportunity for all the children of the State as provided for in the Constitution." Prof. Newbold called attention to the fact that less than one-half of 1 per cent of the country's criminals come from the ranks of educated negroes.

The conference was attended by the State superintendent of education and by many other prominent educators of both races from North Carolina and other States. It was widely and favorably commented on by the press of the State. The Salisbury Post thus expressed the general feeling: "All right-thinking people will be not only willing, but anxious, that the State undertake a bigger and a better program of help for the negroes. . . . It must not allow this good work to lag."—Press Service Com.

AMAZING DIVORCE RATES.

Divorces in the United States in 1923 numbered 165,139, against 42,000 in 1890. The number of wrecked homes has been quadrupled in a third of a century. American families are dissolving at the rate of 450 a day the whole year through. One out of every eight marriages in the United States winds up in a divorce court.

In twenty-five States of the Union the ratios of divorce to marriage are still more amazing.

In Nevada, in 1923, there were more divorces than marriages, due probably to the divorce mill at Reno, and in Nebraska there were 3,200 fewer marriages than the year before. In Oregon there was more than one divorce for every three marriages; in Wyoming and Oklahoma, one divorce for every four marriages; in Arizona, Ohio, Texas, Missouri, Nebraska, and Montana, more than one divorce for every five marriages, and in Idaho and Washington, every fifth marriage ended in a decree of the court. But this is not the worst of it. The divorce rate in the country at large steadily increases. In 1890, it was 58 per 100,000 inhabitants; in 1916, it was 112, and in 1923 it was 149.

In 1916 the divorces granted in North Carolina numbered 668, not including eleven counties not reported on by the county court clerk. In 1923 they numbered 1,497, not counting Surry, whose county court clerk failed to report. In eight years, divorces in the State have moved up from nearly two a day to not quite four a day the year through, counting Sundays.—News Letter.

SOBRIETY PAYS ABUNDANTLY.

Statistics as presented by Hon. Wayne B. Wheeler show that a million lives have been saved by the drop in the death rate since prohibition. We spend $74,000,000 less per year to relieve drink-made poverty. Over 500,000 fewer are drunk on the streets per year. Alcoholic insanity has dropped two-thirds. Diverting our former drink bill of billions of dollars to legitimate business has made possible the auto boom, which put 15,552,077 autos on our roads, giving employment to seven million people; writes monthly a billion dollars worth of new insurance, and adds eighty million daily to our savings. This is a marvelous showing of facts, and prohibition is not to be broken down by the falsehoods of its enemies.—Herald and Presbyter.

Prize of $25,000 for best plan for world peace through education, offered by Raphael Herman, of Washington, D. C., is awarded Dr. David Starr Jordan, chancellor emeritus of Leland Stanford, Jr., University.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

RALEIGH CHURCH OPENING.

Sunday, November 23, 1924, was a memorable day in the history of our Raleigh, N. C., Church and an epochal day for the denomination. On that day a beautiful house of worship, an adequate and impressive temple of praise and prayer, was formally opened with proper and significant exercises.

Three services were held, each largely attended—morning, afternoon and evening. President W. A. Harper was the speaker at the 11 o'clock hour, using as his theme "The Uplifting Power of Jesus." "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," was the scriptural basis of the address. Dr. Harper never spoke to better effect, showing as he did that Jesus, and He alone, was the only solution of our personal, industrial, social and Church problems.

Dr. W. C. Wicker was the speaker at the 3 o'clock service, and delivered a very practical and illuminating sermon on "The Principles and Polity of the Christian Church." Dr. Wicker's exposition of our position as a Church made it appear imperative that our Church carry on in the world, as it has a mission, distinct and emphatic, in the thinking and activities of the times. His discussion of our principles made it clear that we, as a Church, have made a distinct contribution to Church history, and yet have a large and vital place in the world.

At the evening hour, the mission secretary preached on "Some of the Values Growing out of a Vision of God." At all three of the services there was special and inspiring music, with Mrs. Roy O. Caveness as organist and choir director.

The Church edifice is a very impressive one, builded of stone, quaried of native Wake County stone, and costing something over $100,000. The following facts were presented in the beautifully printed twelve-page program of the day:

"This Church was organized in 1881 by Rev. W. G. Clements, and a brick house of worship was erected in 1882, which was used until 1922, when, after a heavy snow, it was condemned as unsafe. The old building was taken down in 1923 to give place to the present structure.

"The new building was designed along lines termed English romanesque, and it shows the influence of what might be called 'Norman Gothic.'

"The exterior is of native stone, carefully selected to produce a soft blending of varied-color tones; the trim and carved work being of limestone. A roof of heavy, rustic, graduating slate of natural color produces a pleasing contrast with the stone, both as to shade and texture.

"The main auditorium has a seating capacity of 350, with gallery accommodating 200 more. In addition to this, the plan is so arranged that the Sunday School auditorium may be thrown in with this by means of rolling partitions, thus adding 300 to the capacity, or making it possible to address 850 from the pulpit.

"Sunday School class-rooms are provided on the second floor over the Sunday School auditorium, and the recreation room in the basement also permits being used for class-room purposes as well as various entertainments, suppers, club gatherings, etc. Connected with this large recreation room is a completely equipped kitchen and pantry.

"All pews, lighting fixtures, organ, grills, etc., were made from special designs, harmonizing with the general architectural treatment."

A cut of the building is herewith presented, which cut, however, but poorly portrays any idea of the magnificence, impressiveness and artistic finish and effect of the building. In none of our Christian Churches visited by the writer has there been a happier and more harmonizing effect of architects' skill, builders' art and designers' taste than one is impressed with as one waits and worships in this Church. If one cannot worship God with all the assent of one's mind, the reverence of one's heart, and the adoration of one's soul in this temple of prayer, then one is dull and stupid and hard-hearted indeed.

Coming, as this congregation has, into the blessed fruition of this present building, program and prospect, there must be a keen sense of gratitude and appreciation on their part not only to the memory of the sainted Rev. W. G. Clements, but to the faithful labors of many yet living who have remained true, loyal and steadfast to the Raleigh Church when the days were dark and prospects were gloomy. Surely a bright and happy day has dawned for our Raleigh Christian Church.

We congratulate the pastor, Dr. William Davidson Parry; the building committee, Prof. L. L. Vaughan, chairman; C. H. Stephenson, R. F. Harward, W. C. Adkins, Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, and William Davidson Parry; the officers of the Church, H. W. Rhodes secretary, R. F. Harward treasurer, C. H. Stephenson assistant treasurer, J. T. Holt auditor; the business board, and all who have wrought so favorably and so well in bringing to pass the opening day and the great temple of worship in which the whole Christian denomination may indulge a deep and pardonable pride.

FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, RALEIGH, N. C.

COURTESY.

[Following is the leading editorial, written by a prisoner, of course, in Good Words, a paper issued by the inmates of the Federal prison, Atlanta, Ga.]

Courtesy is a quality of mankind that pays the highest rate of interest on the investment made. It is an attribute combining good sense and good judgment, which help to form the most desirable habit of good nature. It is a most valuable characteristic for men in any walk of life, but there is no place where it pays better returns than in an institution of this kind.

Humanity is weak, and perfection is never reached, but by the exercise of a little tact, with proper deference for the rights of others, and through the use of civility and courtesy, many rough places can be smoothed out, and thus add to the contentment and happiness of all.

We must all bear in mind that our presence here is not due to the officials over us. The absolute need of rules and regulations to govern this heterogeneous population must be admitted by every one who has given the matter any thought or consideration. The regulatory orders concerning the conduct of the men have been carefully worked out by experienced and reasonable men, and should be complied with.

The guards are expected to see that the rules are obeyed, and are perfectly within their rights and are but discharging their duty when they seek to enforce them. There are also regulations respecting the duties and conduct of the guards which should be lived up to with equal fidelity. It is a mark of inferiority and cowardice for any man to unwarrantably exercise his authority merely for the sake of showing his power.

Unless more drastic measures are proven to be necessary to secure the enforcement of the rules and regulations than a dignified but firm request, there should never be any conflict between the wards and officials. A harsh word, or a sharp command spoken in an insulting tone, will often be met by resistance and obstinacy, when a courteous yet determined order would bring prompt and complacent acquiescence.

On the other hand, an uncivil reply, a sullen and disrespectful attitude, a defiant or indifferent disposition toward authorized rules will not, and should not, be tolerated. We should all remember at all times that each person is entitled to the respect of the other until the right of such personal consideration has been forfeited.

It would be fine indeed if each person here would use this enforced absence from society to cultivate and develop traits of character that would be helpful to them when they are again permitted to mingle with the critical outside world.

There is no single characteristic that will mean more to each one, or that will attract unsolicited assistance more quickly than the uniform use of the pleasing trait of politeness. "A soft answer turneth away wrath" were the words of a wise philosopher spoken hundreds of years ago, but they are just as true and as much in place today as they were the day they were uttered, and just as influential in producing harmony and good will among all classes of men here as they are elsewhere.

True, genuine politeness, however, must not be confused with the ceremonious fawning or cringing kind, but must be of the quality that recognizes the rights of others and the kind that is an outward manifestation of good breeding and proper training, which finds an outlet in subconscious acts of kindness and courteous consideration of all with whom we come in contact.

After all, the basic principle effecting individual relationships can be traced to the Golden Rule, which furnishes a standard for the proper conduct of men here and everywhere.

Remember this and profit by it.

HAVE WE CHRISTIANS LOST FAITH?

When ever any body of believers lost faith in their own selves, or in the distinctive mission and purpose which distinguishes them from other bodies of believers and gives them the right to live a separate denominational existence, that moment it begins to disintegrate and take into itself the processes of death.

And this, far more than anything else, has been the trouble with the Christian denomination. For two generations it has not had any clear conception of its own peculiar mission or any well-grounded conviction of its own worth to the world. It has had no outstanding and distinguishing message. Its voice, where it has not been identical with that of the other denominations about it, has been a confused and halting voice. Some of our leaders of the passing generation actually contended by speech and printed word that the Christian denomination had no mission different from that of the other denominations; that it was its business to help them evangelize the world and nothing more, and that it should get busy building up its own Churches and quit talking about unity among the followers of Jesus Christ. We have some among us yet today who are repeating those same arguments. The consequence is that a large part of the membership of the Christian Church in the past two generations have felt that there was no particular reason why they should prefer one of our own Churches to that of any other denomination. Again and again and again the writer has heard laymen express themselves on this point, declaring that "It does not matter which Church one belongs to, for we are all working for the same place in the end, anyhow." This has been a distressingly general sentiment among our people. And it has been so only because they have never been given any clear and deep-bedded conviction that denominationalism is inherently wrong and that the Christian Church has a contribution of outstanding and exceptional worth to make towards the solution of this deplorable state of division in the Church. Hence they have had no loyalty to our Church, and literally thousands of them have gone into other Churches without making any effort or any sacrifice to establish or promote a Christian Church in the city to which they have gone. A like sentiment found large footing in our ministry. Literally, scores of our men, born and reared in Christian Churches, and many of them educated in our own colleges, have gone to other denominations simply because they felt that it "does not make any difference with which Church we work anyhow!" Both ministers and laymen have thus passed freely out of our denomination with the feeling that they were thereby demonstrating their breadth and bigness and have even rested under the fallacy that they were thus actually promoting the spirit of Christian unity. All this has been possible only because our denominational leaders, our colleges, our periodicals, and our ministers, have failed to make our membership feel the great and challenging task of the Christian Church and its peculiar responsibility to stand as a protest against denominationalism and as a voice for Christian union. Our people, ministers and laymen alike, have not had it made plain to them that there is a most vital difference between the individual liberty now granted by almost all denominations and the basic principles of union for which our denomination stands practically solitary and alone. Neither have they had made plain to them the crucial importance of our message, and how infinitely worthy it is of one's loyalty and sacrifice and service. Nor have our people, ministers and laymen alike, been made to feel that they can give to the kingdom a distinctive contribution of unity and oneness which they cannot give so effectively in any other denomination; and the opportunity of which they surrender the moment they pass from our own to some other Church.

The result of all this has been disastrous indeed. For two generations, our denomination was largely barren of the spirit of self-propagation. It founded almost no Churches, it did little or nothing in a substantial way to extend its borders or to consolidate the territory which already it held. It is almost unbelievable how many of our Conferences have not organized and established any new Churches in twenty years, in forty years—or only two or three struggling ones. The majority of Christian Churches now in existence —we feel confident, though the actual statistics are not before us—are more than fifty years old. What our former leaders were doing all those years that they permitted such a state to continue, it is hard to understand. But we do know that they were not entering the growing cities and building Churches, even within the bounds of their own Conferences; and they were not even enlisting and training any great number of men for the ministry. Almost the whole generation just prior to today passed away in some of our Conferences without any young men being enlisted and trained for pastoral service—or if they were enlisted and trained, they were let go to some other denomination. And the inevitable consequence of all this lack of propagation, this dearth of enthusiastic co-operation in promoting new Churches and building up new fields, was the friction and factionalism which played such havoc in our Church during the past forty or fifty years. Such is always the result to any organization that has lost its vision and its spirit and power of self-propagation and expansion.

It would be worse than useless to recall these humiliating facts about our own past if it were not to forge a truth thereby. And that truth is this: the Christian denomination has not had the spirit of propagation, has not had the purpose and sacrifice that would send it into new fields to build up new Churches, only because it has not a compelling sense of its own distinctive mission and obligation to the world. For two generations its leaders, its periodicals, its colleges, were failing to instill into our ministers and our laymen any proper appreciation of our own denominational position and its worth to the world. For two generations our ministers, in most part, were giving no distinctive message different from that of the ministers of other denominations—or, if they were, it too often was a narrow and bigoted message that belied the principles which they preached and misinterpreted the Church which they loved and wanted to promote. And all this time from our pulpits, in our colleges, and in our periodicals, was being preached a vast deal that minimized the harm of denominationalism and was almost an encouragement to our own ministers and laymen to quit us for some other denomination when ever it came handy. Under such a regime, it is no wonder that our denomination did not grow and that our Conferences did not build new Churches.—Editorial in Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CHURCH PLANNING FOR THE CITY.

All over this country, civic leaders are asking themselves: What is the place of the Church in a great city?

How to plan most wisely, how to frame the most effective strategy from the viewpoint not only of the individual Church, but of the city and its environs as a whole—this is the constant pre-occupation of city pastors and enlightened laymen, whether in Church federations, councils or social agencies or more informal groups.

But in devising such city-wide policies, they often find themselves hampered by inadequate knowledge of the situation as a whole. Diagnosis comes first; prescription follows.

For the first time, the problem of diagnosis has now been solved for one great American city. The whole Protestant Church situation, duly related to its social and economic background, has been scientifically studied in St. Louis, and already far-reaching results have been achieved in that city.

The published report constitutes in effect a Church-planning guide for the American city. The questions here raised and answered are questions with which every large city has to deal. No city library can afford to be without this volume. Every Church leader, every urban sociologist, every city administrator, every official of a community chest will have need to consult it.

Written by H. Paul Douglass, the director of the survey, the report is just published in a handsome octavo volume of 330 pages fully illustrated with pictures and charts. The list price is $4.00 net, but to libraries and to a selected list of individuals it is offered at 16 per cent discount, bringing the price to $3.36. SUFFOLK LETTER.

Slavery was, no doubt, a providential movement for the freedom of a race. The slave-dealers and slave-owners did not intend freedom nor good for the slaves, but God sometimes makes the "wrath of man to praise Him." Joseph's brethren did not intend good for Joseph or future generations, yet Joseph told them when they went to Egypt for bread that "God meant it for good." The service that counts most is unconscious service; and God makes such service result in more than man intends. Columbus was not conscious of discovering a continent, but it resulted in a great nation. The slavery of Israel in Egypt resulted, finally, in an emancipated race and the establishment of a free people.

The negro slave in America was freer and better cared for than he was in Africa by his parents under the reign of despotic chiefs. His fellow-countrymen, under savage chiefs, never enjoyed as much freedom and as good opportunity as he did as a slave in the home of his owner. Slavery was freedom for the negro compared with his original state in his native country. Slavery was the first step to negro freedom. In all great movements, the beginning and the end must both be seen before a sound judgment can be reached. Of Jesus Christ, it is said that "He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied." Looked at from Calvary alone, His life was a failure; but looked at in the light of the unnumbered throng "who have come up through great tribulation and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," Calvary is a star in the night of His suffering. The slaveship was the ship of freedom, and the slave-owner was the guardian of liberty and did not know it. Had he known the sequel, he could not have ministered to the race as he did of his interest, his influence, and his affection. Unconscious, as a mother who rocks the cradle of a future President, the slave-owner and his family were training a race for freedom. That great school of freedom made out of the negro true Americans. They would not now, if they could, return to Africa; they would not speak the African language if they could; they would not adapt the customs or religion of their forefathers; they would not be any other than true Americans.

There are no better men and women in this country than the old slaves who imbibed the spirit, the manners, the social sympathies, and the religious emotions of the old-time slave. The negro ought to thank God that he was a slave, and the white man ought to join him in his freedom. There is no race question. It is a religious question. There is no international question. It is a religious question. All questions could be solved at the altar where men worship God if they would worship Him in spirit and in truth.

HOLY NECK.

Holy Neck Christian Church is one of the old, historic Churches of Nansemond County, Va. It dates back to the early part of last century, and the congregation now occupies its fourth building. Within the last forty-two years it has had only five pastors, two of whom served twenty-five years of this period. The congregation has always been large and has made constant progress, despite the many changes in the citizenship of the community. The Church employs a pastor for his whole time, pays a good salary and furnishes a nice nine-room parsonage. The people are characterized by a high moral tone, neighborly kindness, and hospitality. They are loyal to their local Church and the general enterprises, and are especially kind and gracious to their pastor.

Church Plant.

The present building, erected under the labors of Rev. B. F. Black, is a modern structure, with large auditorium, Sunday School rooms, cathedral windows, and heating and lighting plants, and was paid for when it was built.

The Sunday School, under the direction of Bro. R. C. Norfleet, is the best since the writer has known the Church. It is well organized, well attended, and the interest good. The large number of interested young people is an inspiration. The school spent the third quarter of the present year in the study of missions.

Woman's Missionary.

The Woman's Missionary Society, under the leadership of Mrs. B. D. Jones, is a prominent factor in the Church life. It keeps up a course of mission study, raises its apportionments, contributes to specials, and cultivates the mission spirit in the congregation, through the Sunday School and special programs. The opening exercises of the Sunday School once a month are under the direction of the president, who makes them thoroughly missionary.

Under this head should be mentioned the Willing Workers, under the care of Miss Lil Holland. This is an interesting group of fine young people, doing a good work.

On the fifth Sunday night in November, the Woman's Missionary Society gave the "Magic Thankoffering Box." Notwithstanding the severe weather, a large audience was present. The participants rendered their parts well. The pageant was more than entertaining. It was inspiring, and the delighted audience responded with an offering of more than $22.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

Sunday, November 23d, there was a record attendance at Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., Sunday School, more being present than at any other time in the Church's history.

The officers, teachers, and pastor held a meeting November 10th, and planned a campaign for new members. It was decided that the officers, teachers and all interested members should go out and canvass homes from which the people were not attending Sunday School, soliciting attendance.

The members of the Sunday School seemed to feel their obligation and to take kindly to the new campaign, whose objective was one hundred new scholars. Bro. J. W. Felton conceived the idea of having a nice, large poster printed in colors and hung in the auditorium, which would serve as an incentive to larger effort and would indicate by the inserted figures just the amount of progress each Sunday in securing new scholars. The poster reads as follows: "Our goal is 100 new members in thirty days! How many did you bring? If every other member was just like me, how big would our S. S. be? New scholars today—Sunday, November 16, 10; Sunday, November 23, 30; Sunday, November 30, —; Sunday, December 7, —."

We have already obtained forty new scholars, and it is expected that we will reach our goal of 100 by December 7th. There is an effort to make the Sunday School work more attractive, interesting and helpful, and to make every member not only a drawing power, but a holding power. It is hoped that this may be of value to other Sunday Schools.

Our Sunday School is certainly making splendid progress. A revival is now in progress at the Elm Avenue Church which will continue through December 7th. Efforts are being made to foster the spirit of evangelism throughout the Sunday School.

V. T. Crawford,
Pastor.

"SHOWER."

We had a "shower" in College Court last Tuesday night—at least, the members of the Ladies' Benevolent Social Union said it was a "shower." But when my wife and I looked at the dining-room after they had gone, it looked to us as if it had been a real storm, for the table was loaded with good things, and, for the lack of room, some more good things had to be put on the floor. The list of things which the shower left in its wake would read about as follows: 51 cans of fruit and pickle, 31 pounds of sugar, 8 cans of vegetables, coffee, a fruit cake, condensed milk, apples, bananas, oranges, grape-fruit, raisins, chocolate, dried fruit, pepper (perhaps that was to "pep" me up), cocoa, mince-meat, catsup, a chicken (the adies know what prealchers like), canned meats and fish, 4 partridges, soap, silver polish, furniture polish, witch hazel and playthings for Jane.

The shower left sunshine in its wake, for we knew that the gifts which the ladies brought were an expression of love and thoughtfulness. It happened that Rev. S. J. Venable, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and his wife were in our home when the ladies came, and inasmuch as they had been showered just a few weeks before, they knew how to share our joy on this occasion. Mr. Venable led in a prayer of thanksgiving for the relationship between pastor and people and for the joy of co-operation in the work of the kingdom. It was such an experience as makes one feel a sense of unworthiness and also inspires to deeper consecration. May God help us to be worthy of the love and confidence of this good and great people.

I might add that this "shower" is but an instance of the fine spirit and the generosity of members of the Suffolk Christian Church which has characterized them ever since we came into their midst. They have been most gracious to us, not only in their material gifts, but in their spirit of co-operation as touching the things of the kingdom. And not the least of the blessings in connection with the work here is the fine Christian fellowship and the gracious spirit of co-operation on the part of that prince of men and saint of God, Dr. Staley.

To paraphrase the words of Job, "We had heard of it by the hearing of the ear; but now our eyes seeth it"—the breadth of his mind, the warmth of his fellowship, the sincerity of his affection. Happy indeed is the young man who has such an one for his counselor, and friend, and co-worker.

FRANKLIN, VA.

The Franklin (Va.) Christian Church has planned to hold "Church Night" the first Wednesday in each month, observing the first one on Wednesday, December 2d. The members assembled at 6 P. M. in the Sunday School auditorium for supper, which was served in a most efficient manner by Circle No. 1 of the Ladies' Aid Society. The 130 members present were served a delicious supper, consisting of barbecue, potato salad, hot biscuits, coffee and black cake in forty-five minutes.

The recreation period followed from 6:45 to 7:15 o'clock. Each department of the Sunday School, in the various assembly rooms, were entertained by appointed leaders. The beginners' and primary departments enjoyed games and story-telling; the intermediate department contests and races, and the adults an old-fashioned spelling match and peanut race.

Promptly at 7:15 o'clock every one assembled in the main auditorium for the devotional and prayer service, which was conducted by the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester. Immediately after this prayer service, the three missionary societies held their program meeting. The Willing Workers, under the direction of Miss Maria Holland, the superintendent, had a most interesting meeting, and at this time planned to send each child at the Orphanage a Christmas gift. The young people and the woman's societies united for their meeting, with Mrs. J. B. Gay as leader, using the Christmas program as given in the Christian Missionary, which was most impressive.

During the missionary period, the Norfleet Bible class held a business meeting, and at the same time the deacons of the Church met in their regular monthly business meeting. From 9:15 to 9:45 the teachers and officers of the Sunday School assembled in the pastor's study for their regular monthly meeting to plan for the coming month.

Seven of the regular monthly meetings were combined with the weekly prayer service, and in every way this first "Church Night" was a success. Every one enjoyed the fellowship, and at 10 o'clock went away happy and looking forward to the first Wednesday evening in January.

CORRESPONDENT.

A SURPRISE PARTY.

On the night of November 25th, the congregation of United Christians of Lynchburg, Va., gave the pastor and his family a surprise party. A large truckload of groceries, and a small cash offering were presented to the family. We feel very grateful both for the offering and for the good wishes that accompanied the offering.

On Thanksgiving morning, the congregation gathered in the auditorium of the new Church, which is nearing completion, and held a brief service. At this service, a free-will offering for the Christian Orphanage was received. The check for $10.00 is being mailed to Mr. Johnston.

STEWARDSHIP SUGGESTIONS FOR LOCAL CHURCH PROBLEMS.

Our stewardship department, Dr. W. H. Denison, secretary, Dayton, Ohio, presents the following fine suggestions:

1. Decide definitely to have a stewardship program.

2. Plan for it early. Decide on the textbooks to be used, the date of your stewardship school, and select the instructors for the classes early.

3. Encourage the instructors to prepare themselves thoroughly.

4. Much prayer and Bible study of stewardship should enter into the program.

5. A series of carefully prepared stewardship sermons is important.

6. The midweek service may be wisely used. The pastor's Sunday stewardship sermon may well be the theme of discussion, and he, with his people, may enlarge upon phases of it.

7. Literature carefully chosen, wisely and regularly delivered by person in the homes with comments from the pulpit, and with a check-up on its results is very desirable.

8. One or more special stewardship speakers may be secured for an occasion.

9. Reading contests with definitely assigned matter are helpful. Be sure to enlist the entire congregation.

10. Use charts and mottoes. Splendid stewardship mottoes, eight in a set, 15x22 inches, prepared by the United Stewardship Council, used by all denominations, may be secured from the C. P. A. for 25 cents a set.

11. Make a careful study of your own methods of Church finance and see how they may be made more scriptural, how improved.

12. Try to place at least one good stewardship book in each family.

13. Enlist and enroll tithers. This is exceedingly important. Tithing testimony is valuable. This bureau has a beautiful Tithers' League wall chart, free for each Church. Send list of tithers and addresses to this office and we will mail them a neat membership certificate free.

14. Write to the secretary of Christian stewardship for further suggestions.

FIFTH FINANCIAL GOAL OF MEN AND MILLIONS FORWARD MOVEMENT.

This is the last financial goal. Many of the critics of the movement have never studied the movement enough to know that it had any other goal but this one. This goal was to obtain subscriptions for $750,000. There was subscribed $533,911, of which subscription $123,472 had been paid on October 1, 1924—just 23 per cent of the total subscription. The time for final payment on this goal has been extended to December 31, 1925. I have been often asked what total amount will be collected. After making a careful survey and taking into consideration every factor, I think we should raise at least 50 per cent of the total subscription, or $267,000. Many Churches will pay their quota; many less, and a good many nothing.

Let us all pray and work for a 50 per cent total. Every enterprise of the Church will share in the additional $144,000. The Mission Board especially needs your help. We had great faith in you. Don't disappoint us. J. E. WEST,
Chairman of Mission Board.

We are very grateful to these good schools for their liberal offerings to our mission cause. We trust that this number shall greatly increase, as funds are so much needed now to carry forward our missionary work at home in Carroll County, Va., and abroad in Japan. We are happy at what these wide-awake schools are now doing.

Gratefully,
J. O. ATKINSON,
Mission Secretary.

FIRST CHURCH, WINCHESTER.

One of the most successful evangelistic campaigns ever held in the First Christian Church, Winchester, Va., came to a close last night. For two weeks, this meeting has been in progress, with increasing interest and attendance at every succeeding service.

Yesterday morning at 11 o'clock, a good audience was present and enjoyed immensely the singing of the old gospel hymns, led by Mrs. Davis and the wonderful piano playing of Mr. Sam Davis. At the close of the song service the pastor announced his subject, "What are You Waiting For?" and the text from Psalms 39:7, "Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in Thee." In this sermon, Mr. Morgan answered in a most practical way the many excuses given by people as to why they are not Christians and enthusiastic followers of the Christ. At the close of the message, ten were received into the Church.

Promptly at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Mrs. Davis announced the opening hymn, and a fine afternoon service was on. The audience was great, and every moment of the service was enjoyed. At the close of a most enthusiastic song service, the pastor, Rev. J. F. Morgan, announced his subject, "Escape for Thy Life," taking as a text the seventeenth verse of the nineteenth chapter of Genesis.

After a graphic description of the context, Mr. Morgan declared that "When the text is rightly understood, the meaning was—escape from thy sin. Poverty may worry me," proclaimed the pastor, "and grief may bereave me, and disappointment may sadden me; but the only thing in the universe of God that can debauch, paralyze, doom and damn my soul is sin."

"In order to live," emphasized the preacher, "men must escape from the sin of indifference, from the sin of profanity, from the sin of Sabbath desecration, the sin of gambling, the sin of licentiousness, and from the sin of intemperance."

In closing, Mr. Morgan pointed out the Christ most tenderly as the only refuge from any sin, and urged all who were not Christians to accept Him.

Long before 7:30, the hour for the evening service, the Church was largely filled, and the service was begun. For nearly an hour the great audience was thrilled by the inspiring music, led by Mr. and Mrs. Davis. The last selection rendered by Mr. Davis was "God Be With You Till We Meet Again." This was very impressive, and brought the audience into a fine frame of mind for the evening sermon on the subject, "The Fivefold Invitation."

This closing sermon was one of the best of the series, and was enjoyed very much by the audience present. Mr. Morgan stressed in this sermon the invitation of the Holy Spirit, the Church, the Christian, and emphasized the fact that those who were thirsty, and all who will, are invited to come to Christ and live. At the close of the message, ten came forward and united with the Church, making a total of twenty members received during the campaign, with others to join later.

Just preceding the message, Mr. Morgan took the opportunity to express his appreciation and that of the Church for the news items carried in this paper about the meeting, and to Mr. and Mrs. Davis for their splendid work, and to the merchants for displaying placards announcing the meeting, and to all who had in any way helped to make this revival the success it was.

The members of the First Christian Church are very grateful to their pastor for the splendid work he has done in leading them in such a great revival. This is the fourth revival Mr. Morgan has conducted since becoming pastor of this Church, and all have been good; but the one just closed has been a greater success than any of the others, showing that his influence among his membership and the community is increasing.—Independent (Winchester, Va.).

COMPLETENESS OF DOVER CHURCH.

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

It was with some surprise, and not a little disappointment that we read in last week's (November 20th) issue of THE SUN two or three lines in the report of Bro. W. P. Fletcher, of some of his experiences while on a visit to the Churches of our denomination, that at People's Christian Church, Dover, after inspecting the entire plant, expresses delight at such a building, stating that "the writer was led to thank God and take courage, that a building so beautiful, so worshipful and supremely so useful in carrying on God's work has been dedicated to God's glory and the upbuilding of His people," and then criticises or makes unfavorable comment of two things which, to the mind of any one who has seen the building in its entirety, could not be more contradictory, unreasonable and unwarranted. I refer to the following lines of his article: "The Dover social and dining-room, and the kitchen, both very fine in themselves, are not conveniently related, and the provision for intermediates seems to be weak."

You, Mr. Editor, who visited us on our dedication day, as well as Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk, and Dr. Denison, of Dayton, Ohio, know full well that no more convenient place could have been selected for the social room, or community hall, away from the main Church auditorium, so that there could never be any conflict in services, and that the kitchen and dining-room could not be more convenient if all the architects or builders in the country had studied over such a plan. By every one who has visited the builidng—and we have had them since dedication day from nearly every quarter of the country—the kitchen and dining-room, as to location, are pronounced perfect, with all conveniences known.

As to the room for intermediates, again we say there could not possibly be a better arrangement. They meet in the social, or community, hall for the opening exercises on Sunday, after which they go to the several rooms designated for them in the rear—three on the same floor as the community hall, enclosed with folding-doors, and three in the balcony over the hall. In all these rooms the teachers, or instructors, are doing good work, and happy in their work, with conveniences all that could be required.

As proof of the completeness and perfect satisfaction as to the Dover Church plant and its equipment, only yesterday (Sunday, November 23d) Mr. Eldridge R. Johnson, president of the Victor Talking Machine Company, of Camden, N. J., whose contributions made possible the Dover plant, while on a visit here at the dedication of the chimes in the tower, which he gave as a memorial to his father, Asa Johnson, publicly expressed to the large audience present at the afternoon dedication service his great appreciation of the work done, and said that he knew of no building anywhere to compete with People's Christian Church and community center, both as to quality and convenience in all respects, and the wonder to him was how the work was done with the amount of money available, and that from the commercial standpoint we had twice the value for the amount invested.

Dealing in big things with vast sums of money, as Mr. Johnson does, this expression of complete satisfaction with the Dover Church plant, in which he had no mean part, we feel that the comment of Bro. Fletcher is a little out of order and that he should not have made such a statement concerning our plant when he saw but little of it in his short stay here, which was between trains.

I hope, Mr. Editor, that you will give this expression of our disapproval wide publicity. We invite all, everybody from every where, to "come and see" the Dover People's Christian Church plant, and be satisfied as to what we really have in Delaware's State capital—the greatest Church and social center building any where to be found; a monument to the denomination, to a public-spirited citizen of New Jersey, a former Dover boy, and to a devoted and loyal pastor of People's Christian Church.

Very truly yours,

Dover, Del. HERMAN C. TAYLOR.

"GOOD WORDS."

[This caption, "Good Words," is the name of a journal of eight pages, published monthly at the United States Penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga.—"A paper dedicated to the welfare of the men in prison." It is prefaced and printed by the inmates of the prison, and the copy we have carries wholesome and suggestive articles. The following is an editorial written by the editor, W. T. McCray, who was the Governor of Indiana till taken from that high office and sent to the prison for a term.]

DISOBEDIENCE.

The history of the human race began with disobedience. The penalty following this first breach of trust was banishment from the beautiful Garden of Eden, and the introduction of sin into the world, and since that day disobedience has ever been followed by punishment of some character.

The law of obedience should be taught in the home, beginning in the early stages of childhood. The training should be of the wholesome kind that teaches respect for law and follows strictly the rules of rectitude and proper living. This prepares the way for good citizenship and happy homes. Any departure from the established rules of conduct, or any acts of disobedience of the laws of God or man is likely to inflict penalties on the mind and body that destroys happiness and peace of mind, if it does not bring on more severe punishment.

The laws of nature are never disobeyed. They are as immutable as the hills. Through all the ages they have remained inflexible and unchangeable. Since the dawn of civilization, the planets have moved in their fixed orbs, without the variation of a fraction of a second. Astronomers can calculate with mathematical precision just when definite astronomical phenomena will take place.

Such exact obedience cannot be expected to the laws of State and nation, as they are not divinely inspired. Without disobedience at first, all might have been different.

SAVING THE WORLD FOR HUMANITY.

Sir Willoughby Dickinson, British privy councilor and former member of the English Parliament, delivered an address before the Federal Council of Churches at Atlanta, Ga., last week, in which a powerful plea was made to outlaw war and save the world for humanity. Below is given a part of what the English statesman said:

"People talk a great deal about America holding herself aloof from Europe; but the fact is quite the contrary. Every day one sees America financing European countries, either in purely business affairs or in financial speculations, or in great charitable enterprises. Then we find her citizens helping to solve problems of international concern, such as that of reparations, or the sale of opium. It is time that she should dispense also some of that moral force which is the foundation of that widespread religious conviction of the American nations.

"Permanent peace can only be attained through a change in human nature. Man is a combatant animal, and until men can be induced to regard war as a crime, little progress can be made in the direction of abolishing war. A League of Nations or a Court of International Justice are useful institutions and are probably the best things that politicians can create; but they will not suffice to secure peace until the conscience of mankind is awakened. This is the duty of the Churches, and they alone can perform it."

DESTRUCTION DESPITE WARNING.

Last evening, with a congregation that filled the Church to capacity, the Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of First Christian Church, where special evangelistic services are in progress, brought a soul-stirring message to that vast audience on the subject, "He that Taketh Warning." The text was from the latter part of the fifth verse of the thirty-third chapter of Ezekiel, "He that taketh warning shall deliver his soul."

"God has erected and is using," said the speaker, "multitudes of warnings along the pathway of life to warn people of the danger of sin. Some of these warnings are the Bible, the Church, mother's prayers, the cross, and the holy spirit. The Church calls to every child, man and woman, to go no further in sin. But despite these warnings, many people are failing to heed them and rushing on to eternal destruction."

In closing, the pastor used striking illustrations, showing the joy and happiness of a delivered soul, and made a strong appeal for every one to heed these warnings before it is too late.

At 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a large audience gathered at the Church to hear Sam Davis, famous blind pianist, give his experience in life. Mr. Davis made a heart-to-heart talk that was given the closest attention by every one present. It was a great opportunity to hear this consecrated young man tell of the many difficulties he had to overcome to make a decision for Christ and give his time and talents to religious work.

At the 11 o'clock service the pastor spoke on the value of Church membership, stressing the importance and value of membership in the Church. It was a strong appeal for Church people to consider the way they are treating their soul and the Church, the only institution that has as its supreme task the saving of souls. "Thousands of members are lost to the Church every year," affirmed the pastor, "because when people move from one part of the country to another they fail to value their Church membership enough by moving it along with them to the local Church which they can attend and support." The need of more regular and better Church attendance was one of the strong points emphasized.

Service tonight will begin promptly at 7:30. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have charge of the preliminary services, and the half-hour they use for songs and special selections by Mr. Davis on the piano is being thoroughly enjoyed by every one.—Winchester (Va.) Evening Star.

MONTICELLO C. E. SOCIETY.

The Monticello Christian Endeavor Society was organized about two years ago with twelve charter members. Since that time the membership has grown to sixty members. This society is composed of members from the various denominations of the community. However, the greater number comes from the Methodist Protestant and Christian denominations.

During the past twelve months the society presented a missionary pageant and gave the proceeds to the home mission mountain work in Carroll County, Va. Another play was also presented by the society during the summer, and by this means many hours have been made more pleasant for the sick. For this work, the sum of about seventy dollars has been raised.

A class in expert Christian Endeavor was conducted for a short time under the leadership of Rev. C. E. Gerringer. Due to illness of the leader, this work was discontinued. A prayer service is held each Sunday night, in which much interest is shown, and has proved to be of much help in developing the spirit of leadership among the young people. Another feature that has been of some interest is the monthly business and social meetings.

These are some of the results coming from a little band of members inspired by the leadership of Miss Ophelia Barker and Rev. C. E. Gerringer, who did so much to encourage the work in the beginning.

FEEDING THE LAMBS.

"Feed my lambs."—John 21:15.

It is interesting to observe that in that remarkable conversation of our Lord on the shore of Tiberias, His first command to Peter was to feed the lambs. Jesus discovered the worth of children, called attention to them, took them in His arms and blessed them, and before He went away ordered that they should first have consideration. This is as it should be. The shepherd that ignores the lambs will soon find he has no flock. The hope of civilization and the Church is in the children. The State seems to understand this, and spares no pains in building adequate school buildings and employing well-paid and trained teachers to prepare them for citizenship. But children need a food that the State does not claim to give. This must be provided in our homes and Churches. And no loyal citizen of God's kingdom ought to complain at the cost of amply providing for them. Happy is the home and the Church where children abound! And, happier still if they are so trained and fed that the number in our homes and Churches will be no less in heaven.

Prayer.—Our Father, bless the children in our homes and Churches. Help us to rightly appreciate them and to properly feed and train them. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.—T. E. White.

TUESDAY.

TRUE BEAUTY.

*"And his face did shine as the sun."*Matt. 17:2.

True beauty does not come from without, but from within. It is not temoprary, but permanent. It is not something put on from the outside, but something which grows on from something planted within. It is not of the face, but of the heart. Yet the face reveals it, as when the enemies of Stephen beheld his face as it had been the face of an angel. The wise man said, "Wisdom maketh his face to shine," and "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Also, it is written that "the wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament." That person who communes long hours with God in prayer will find upon his face the answer to the psalmist's prayer: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us." It was thus with Jesus on the mount. It was a mount of prayer before it was a mount of transfiguration. It was so with Moses, who, after forty days and night, had communed with God that the skin of his face did shine. The Bible tells of one woman who painted her face (see 2 Kings 9:30), but it did not save her. True beauty is always from within—a heart-condition where God's truth abides and where there is constant communion with the Creator.

Prayer.—Our Father, we thank Thee for Thy truth, for the wisdom that comes from above and which makes our faces to shine. Amen.—T. E. White.

WEDNESDAY.

SPIRITUAL BLINDNESS.

"I am the light of the world. He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."—Jno. 8:12.

Our Saviour cured several cases of blindness, but this is the only one, so far as we know, that was blind from birth. The disciples wonder and are concerned as to the reason for this man's blindness.

Many people today are bothered with causes and reasons for, and balk because they do not understand. They refuse to accept facts which they cannot reason out. They are spiritually blind, and in faith dead. This blind man accepted the fact. After Christ touched him, he didn't need a philosopher to tell him that he could see.

When Christ touches us spiritually and the sunlight of His love breaks forth in our souls, we don't need a doctor or a birth certificate to tell us we are born. We can say, "I know."

Let the light of joy into the life. Let the light of love get into thy heart. Let the light of grace get into thy speech. Let the light of peace get into thy soul. Then thou shalt see the way to eternity. It will be illumined, and thou thyself will shine on through eternity.

Prayer.—Heavenly Father, may the spirit of Him who is the light of the world so illuminate our lives that we may prove to the world that we have been with Jesus. Amen.—B. J. Earp.

THURSDAY.

THE WORD OF GOD.

"I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as strange things."—Hos. 8:12

Ephraim has failed to acquaint himself with the law of God, and hence he has not kept it. God rebukes him for this neglect. This is a picture of ourselves sometimes. We fail in our obedience to God's Word because of our ignorance of it. We read a lot about the Bible, but it is easy to neglect the Book itself.

The Bible is God's Word for us. When we fail to acquaint ourselves with it, like as with Ephriam, being ignorant of it does not relieve nor excuse our responsibility. He has given it to us, and in it He wants to tell us the way of life; and thanks be that it is a lamp unto our feet and a light unto that way. He who reads it and knows it today finds the same loving spirit that prompted its authors and also that divine power that helps one to understand for himself.

Prayer.—Dear Father, help us to count not the Word of the Lord as strange to us, but as we search for Thy truth in it may Thy spirit teach us what Thou wouldst have us to do. Amen. —B. J. Earp.

FRIDAY.

THE VINE OF LOVE.

"Abide in me, and I in you."—Jno. 15:4.

This portion of the fifteenth chapter possesses perennial freshness. It is the symbol of the vine and the branches. Can the mind of man imagine a more fitting imagery to employ in setting forth the fact of an intimate fellowship for a great service? "I am the true vine," He said, "and my Father is the Husbandman." In that simple sentence is concentrated the very fullness of Jesus' mission. We see God as the planter and cultivator of that perfect Vine. We understand that the Vine is set out in the world to bring forth a great harvest of character and life for God, who is the Husbandman. "I am the Vine," said Jesus; "ye are the branches." The branches are parts of the vine; they have their life in it; they derive all strength from it; they are wholly dependent upon it. The vine must depend upon its branches for the fruit. If the branches bear not, the Husbandman cuts them away and casts them into the fire. Thus we see the disciples and Jesus in this picture completely fused in the common vine of love for the great purpose of bringing forth rich harvests for God.

Christian disciples today are His branches. If we are false, we shall wither and be worthy of elimination as part of the Vine and the plan of God, the Husbandman. But if He abides in us and we abide in His love, then shall we bear much fruit and glorify our Father who is in heaven. This Vine of love and service ramifies throughout human society. The branch is preserved wherever, by high deovtion and noble loyalty, men show that Christ abides in them and they in Him.—Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—O Heavenly Father, inspire and constrain us daily to preserve high devotion and noble loyalty to Thee, that as the branch of Thy life we may bear fruit unto Thee now and hereafter. Amen.

SATURDAY.

BORROWING AND PAYING.

Lessons: Ps. 37:21; Prov. 22:7; Matt. 5:42.

Are you slow and negligent in returning money borrowed from friends?

Isn't it true that when you borrow money without security from some one friendly enough to lend it to you, you put off repaying that friend until you can do so with the least possible inconvenience to yourself?

Did you ever consider that your friend may be in need of the money you have borrowed, but hesitates to embarrass you?

And so he does not ask you for what belongs to him.

No matter how strong your friendship, remember that you weaken it if you borrow and your friend gets the idea that you do not return the money as soon as you might.

There is no agency that will strain and sever a friendship more completely than an unpaid debt between friends.

The friend who feels he is being neglected while you may be favoring others cannot be blamed for allowing his friendly feelings to cool.

Borrowing and loaning among friends, unless carried on business principles, is a friendship-wrecker, sooner or later. (Copyright, 1924, International Feature Service, Inc.)

Prayer.—In Thy light, oh Lord, we shall walk and be free; in Thy providence we shall not want; in Thy guidance we shall have plenty; in Thy strength we shall be restored. Grant unto us a deep consecration of our lives and never to depart from the path of right and rectitude. Amen.

SUNDAY.

OUR PRAYING.

"But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret."—Matt. 6:6.

Prayer is communion with God. It is a deep and intimate experience. Public praying is often helpful and stimulating to our spiritual life; but our best praying is done in private, when we have entered our closet and shut the door. There we can open our hearts to God. Blackest stains are washed away, and highest inspirations come there—alone!

Often, one can pray in the crowded subways of the city or on the busy corners of the world. But Jesus, whose prayer-life was perfect and beautiful, tells us to leave the corners and go to a quiet place, if our praying is to be really fruitful.

It is possible for us to pray without moving our lips or uttering a sound. As some one has said: "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed." But the best prayers are prayed aloud. The love and devotion, the hope and aspiration, the intercession and plea of the inmost heart, are made more real and powerful when put into words. Often our prayer shrivels and dies when we only think it. But let it be spoken, and it becomes meaningful, helpful, beautiful!

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIEND:

Our Thanksgiving offering is coming in nicely, and we hope during the month of December to reach our goal of ten thousand dollars for the Thanksgiving offering, and also reach our goal of twenty-seven thousand for the entire year. It will be great, won't it?

Let us all do our best to reach the two goals. If you see toward the close of the month that I am too far from the goal to be comfortable, send me your personal check to push a little. It will cheer me up some.

Ah! what a precious privilege—the privilege of bringing everything to God in prayer! Alone, in a quiet place, kneeling, hands clasped, head bowed, eyes closed, the world shut out, and speaking aloud to Him who heareth even the humblest prayer of the little child—what peace and power and joy are there! How true the poet's lines:

"Lord, what a change within us, one short hour
Spent in Thy presence will avail to make!
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take!
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!"

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

December 21, 1924.

Topic: "The World's Need of Christ."

Lesson Text: John 1:14-18, 3:16-21.

Golden Text: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3:16.

Devotional Reading: John 1:1-9.

Home Readings: M., Dec. 15—The word made flesh, John 1:10-18. T., Dec. 16—God's gift to the world, John 3:16-21. W., Dec. 17—The Babe of Bethlehem, Luke 2:1-7. T., Dec. 18—The vision of the shepherds, Luke 2:8-20. F., Dec. 19—The worshiping wise men, Matt. 2:1-10. S., Dec. 20—The Prince of peace, Isa. 9:1-7. S., Dec. 21—The living Word, John 1:1-9.

The birth of Jesus Christ has two aspects, as Dean Farrar writes: The nativity itself, the most stupendous fact in history (with which we began our series of lessons on July 6th) and the incarnation, a revelation of eternity, the great doctrine of our religion, which John declares in the first chapter of his great gospel. 'The birth of that little Babe in the stable of the humble inn at Bethlehem—there is the event. 'The Word became flesh'—there is the doctrine, and the mystery. God became Man. The mystery itself we cannot fathom; of that we say, 'I seek rather to believe than to reason.' "

Two friends were one day walking in the fields, talking as they walked of the inscrutable mystery of God's doings. One of them, a man of some intellectual force, whose heart however had never yet been opened to the divine light, said petulantly, "How can a man of finite mind know God? How can he discern what God is doing? How can he understand God's will?" And, pointing contemptuously to an ant-hill where thousands of insects were busy at their toil, he asked, "How can those ants understand what is in my mind?" Like a flash, the answer came: "There is only one way—by you becoming an ant and declaring it to them!" And in that answer lies everything that we need for the enlightenment of our minds, and the establishment of our hearts. For God became Man in the person of His Son, that we might have a calm, unshaken confidence in him. —Dr. J. Stuart Holden, in the Confidence of Faith.

If the symbolism of Christmas is explained to children, and they are made to see how the story of the birth of Jesus is really the source of all their happiness, Christmas will be not merely a day of enjoyment, but an influence in shaping and strengthening character. To the grown-up who instructs the child, quite as much as to the child who is instructed, the retelling of the Christmas story and the endeavor to make its appeal vivid and personal will probably bring some addition of grace if not of strength for facing life's immediate problems.

Because Christianity is the religion of friendliness, of cheerfulness, of happiness, and not a religion of gloom and asceticism, we should make the day dedicated to the founding of Christianity one of good cheer.—Youth's Companion.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

December 21, 1924.

Topic: "Christmas in Poetry and Song."

Scripture Text: "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth, good will to men."—Luke 2:14.

Daily Reading: M., Dec. 15—Matt. 2:1-12, Matthew's music. T., Dec. 16—John 1:1-14, The eternal note. W., Dec. 17—Phil. 2:1-11, Harmony of good will. T., Dec. 18—Isa. 9:6-7, Discord no more. F., Dec. 19—1 Tim. 3:16, Paul's stanza. S., Dec. 20—Rev. 5:6-14, The king's song. S., Dec. 21—Luke 2:8-16, The Christmas story in poetry and song.

There was rejoicing in the world when Jesus came. The angels announced the coming to the shepherds, and the heavenly hosts joined in a chorus of song.

Music Opens Closed Doors.

Among the boys in the army camps, you often found groups which did not want to "be preached to," and if you wanted to give them a message of the gospel, which they so much needed, it was a problem. But the solution of the problem and one that opened the door to teaching and preaching and serving them was music and song. When they wouldn't listen to be "preached at," they would sit in rapture and listen to the gospel message in a song, and it opened their hearts to remember again the things which were eternal and of which they had so great need.

One of the beauties of real poetry and song is that it never grows old and you never tire of it. You repent it ten thousand times ten thousand times, and it gets but the sweeter and dearer to our listening ears and our understanding hearts. "Glory to God in the highest" as tested on that basis is surely born of heaven and is great indeed, for of it we never have and never will tire, and when we get to heaven and ten million years have rolled beyond the rolling of the suns, and "we've as many days to sing God's praise as when we first begun," yet, even then, I am sure that we will not tire of the angel's song on Bethlehem's plains, but the saints and the cherubim will unite in its chorus around the throne and the redeemed will join in the everlasting song of "Glory to God in the highest." Real song is from the heart, and heaven's singing may surprise us in being led by those who had no physical voice here, but whose hearts have been attuned to the music of the spheres. To be sure, they have lost much here by not expressing themselves in musical cadence, but if there is real music in the heart it will out in heaven.

"Alas for those who never sing,
But die with all their music in them."

Intermediate Topic: "What is my idea of a happy Christmas?"—Acts 20:35; Isa. 41:6.

Junior Topic: "The birth of Jesus."—Matt. 2:1-11.

EVANGELISM OF YOUTH.

Rev. Henry Sweets, D. D., of Louisville, Ky., delivered a powerful address before the Federal Council of Churches at Atlanta, Ga., last week on "Winning the Youth to Christ." Dr. Sweets said, in part:

"Evangelism without education leads to superstition and fanaticism. Education without the warmth of evangelism passes into cold formalism and skepticism. The two are united in the thought of God. They must be kept together in the work of men. To neglect either is to limit the usefulness and imperil the life of the Church.

"Because of the sad neglect of the religious element in education we have in our land conditions that have awakened the serious concern of all thoughtful men and women. Our people have become educated, but there is an awful breakdown in character.

"We have given myriads of courses and innumerable facts about material things, but have failed to teach the things of the spirit. We have taught the facts of life and how to make a living, but have not put the youth in touch with the source of life nor helped them discover the real meaning of living.

"A call for action became imperative. It cannot neglect the heart, the conscience, the will, and produce the best results. Only religion can reach and successfully control the deep well-springs of man's being. The Church must be called again to her task as the teacher of religion. In every way it must endeavor to supply this great leak in the education of today.

"There are many causes for concern in the schools. The situation is serious, and the call for action is loud and clear. A true comprehension of the condition of the educational situation today gives added cause for concern and for intelligent, united action.

Education Is Safe.

"The schools are now literally crowded with their enriched curricula. The change in the social and economic condition of the home, new knowledge in the field of science, of industry and commerce, and the demands upon the physical, intellectual, practical and social life of the day have caused the educators to feel that none of the interests of life are beyond their responsibility. They argue wisely that education is not preparation for life, but life itself.

"The field of their endeavors covers all areas of human life. All except the deepest and most fundamental of all the interests of the soul. In such a crowded schedule, the Church has little opportunity to impart, and the child has little capacity to receive the needed religious training.

"When every other interest receives such careful attention, the student is apt to conclude that religion is of minor importance. The neglect of its place and sphere, sometimes unconsciously on the part of educators, produces this impression. On the other hand, many teachers believe that the central facts of religion are unknowable and are producing upon the minds of their pupils the impression that religion is in the realm of superstition, that it dwells in the dark recesses that can never be fathomed and that the intellect has no need to concern itself about such mysteries.

"Another fact that should arouse the Church and the home to clearer sense of their neglect and of coming danger lies in the fact that in reality some teachers are manufacturing a new religion, or are seeking to erect a scientific scheme to do the work that religion has done and alone can do. The end of this religion is 'socialized democracy.'

"Its law is an 'ethical code' which will lead to 'scientific morale.' Its deity is reason. Its end is character achieved by self-reliance, self-culture, self-respect and self-expression. It gives no place to a personal God, and no recognition to the moral law."

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

DEAR DIDDIES:

December is here at last! What does that mean? Oh—ee! cold days, and Jackey Frost coming every night. Did you ever see how he paints the meadows and the fields? He just takes out his little silver brush and paints our window-panes, and the meadows and the green grass. Then sometimes he pinches our noses—oh, my! and our toes—whew!—and we are so happy over it all because Santa Claus comes too the same time of year that Jackey Frost comes, 'cept—my! my! wouldn't it be great if Santa came as often as Jackey Frost?

Have you written your letter to Santa yet? Then, hurry up, little folks, do! He is very, very busy this year anyway. His work-shop is full of toys, and his workmen are busy as bees. He is getting ready. Oh—ee, I can hear, almost hear their hammers tapping away now—tick-a-tack-a-too, "we're making this for you—"

I'm going to hang up my stocking as well as you, and I am all grown up. I love Santa—do you?

Love to all Santa's little friends.

Your editor,

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

THE WINDMILL.

Busily, busily
Turn the sails,
Never they linger
Unless the wind fails;
Small must the breeze be
They cannot use—
Who ever saw them
Their labor refuse?

While they are turning,
Their work to fulfill,
Many a lesson
I learn from the mill—
Learn to use gladly
All means in my way,
Thankful to labor
While it is day.

HOW ELSIE EARNED CHRISTMAS MONEY.

Little Elsie Blake ran into the room where her mother was sitting, and almost out of breath said: "Oh, mother, the girls in my Sunday School class are to help make a poor family comfortable for the winter. Please give me some money."

"But if I gave you the money," said her mother, "you will not be helping them. I shall be the one."

"But where shall I get it if you or father do not give it to me? I have spent all of my allowance, and I want it before my next is due."

"You must earn it," said her mother; "that is the only way you can truly give anything. Tomorrow you can work half an hour before school in the morning and half an hour at noon. I have a large bag of pieces which you can look over and sort the woolen from the cotton and silk and tie them in neat bundles. Then we will see what you can do after that."

The next morning Elsie was up bright and early and began her work, and at night she said to her mother: "I have finished the work you gave me and have thought of something else. Mrs. Brown's nurse is sick, and she has no one to wheel the baby. Perhaps she would let me do that in the morning, and at noon I could hurry from school, and I will be very careful with the baby."

And sure enough, Mrs. Brown was very glad to have her. At the end of the week Elsie had all her own earnings to give towards helping the poor family.

After she returned from giving the money she said to her mother: "I had a very pleasant feeling about giving that money, because I worked to get it. Could you find something to do that would help you and give me a few pennies for each week? Then the next time I am asked to give I shall have something saved."

Her mother was very much pleased, because Elsie spent her pennies very freely and never thought about any one having to earn them. The next day her mother told her how she could look over the clothes when they came from the laundry and put away those that did not need mending, and all that needed buttons she could attend to; then she would teach her to darn and then she could men the stockings.

Elsie was pleased, and before long she was a good helper for her mother, who was proud of her daughter's thriftiness. And the next Christmas Elsie had earned all the money for her presents for the family. Wasn't that nice?

THE SNOW BOY.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

The Harlow children lived in the days when there were no automobiles. In summer they rode on the hay wagon, and in winter, whenever there was enough snow on the ground, they got black Sam, the hired man, to take them out in his home-made sleigh.

Sam was very proud of the sleigh and of Nelly, his old gray horse. He sat up very stiff when he drove, and looked straight ahead of him. Madge and Hal and little Christopher sat behind and sang.

When they heard that their Florida cousins were coming to see them they were much excited. Laura and little Phoebe, the two cousins, had never seen any snow. If only it would snow for Thanksgiving!

"We hope to take you on a sleigh-ride," Madge and Hal wrote to Laura.

"I'm going to show you a snow man," Christopher wrote to little Phoebe; at least he thought he wrote that, but he was merely making scratches that Madge turned into words for him.

So all the way up from Florida Laura was thinking about the sleigh-ride, and little Phoebe was bouncing up and down on the red plush seat and saying, "Christopher will make me a snow boy. I know he will."

For two days the sky was as clear as crystal; then, to the children's joy, it began to cloud over. When they went to bed the night before Thanksgiving not a star was to be seen, and early the next morning Laura waked every one with cries of joy, for the ground was covered deep with snow and the air was full of falling flakes. It had snowed all night long. Phoebe came flying to the window in her little night gown. "Where is my snow boy?" she cried.

Christopher strutted up and down. "I will make you a snow boy after breakfast," he promised.

"Maybe we can go sleigh-riding after breakfast," said Laura.

Sam was at the door almost before they got up from the table. "Anybody want to take a ride?" he asked; "I've got a mighty fine sleigh out here."

Five minutes later the children were snugly packed away in the sleigh. Sam was going to take them for a ride and then bring them back to the Church to join the rest of the family.

"Christopher, will you keep still?" his mother asked, for she knew that her little boy was not in the habit of keeping still.

"Yes, ma'am," said Christopher; "as still as I can."

Everybody laughed at that, and away went the sleigh, with bells jingling and old Nelly stepping high, and Sam holding the reins very tight.

Laura sat up straight with her hands in her new white muff. "Oh, this is just splendid!" she said.

Little Phoebe rested her chin on the edge of the sleigh, and her eyes were big with wonder.

"Get up, Nelly!" called Sam in a loud voice, and on they went, jingle, jangle, jingle. Oh, such fun!

Christopher wiggled with joy. He thought he was keeping still, but Madge had to hold him a good part of the time. Once he dropped his cap overboard and Sam had to stop and pick it up.

"Now, I'm going to keep as still as a mouse," Christopher said after that.

But he was a very lively mouse. As they went round a curve in the road on the way back they met a gay red sleigh drawn by prancing black horses. There were children in the red sleigh, and they leaned out and laughed and waved their hands.

The children in the home-made sleigh laughed and waved their hands too.

"I like ours just as well," said Laura.

"Three cheers for our sleigh!" cried Hal.

So they wave three loud cheers for Sam's sleigh. Just as they finished, little Phoebe cried shrilly, "And three cheers for my snow boy!"

She was pointing back at a white object on a bank at the side of the road.

"Sure enough, there's a snow man," Hal said; "I didn't see it before."

The next instant there was a cry from Madge. "Oh, where is Christopher?"

Where was Christopher indeed? Certainly not in the sleigh. Sam brought Nelly up with a jerk and leaped to the ground.

"He was here half a minute ago," Madge wailed. "Just before we passed that sleigh."

"Ho, my snow boy is moving!" Phoebe cried; "do snow boys walk?"

"It's Christopher! it's Christopher! He tumbled out of the sleigh!" cried Madge and Hal together.

Sam was already racing back down the road. In another moment Madge, Hal and Laura had scrambled out of the sleigh and were at his heels.

They found Christopher covered with snow from head to foot and crying lustily.

"O Christopher, are you hurt?" Madge cried.

He was not hurt at all, but he was badly scared and much ashamed.

Phoebe had not been able to get out of the sleigh by herself. She watched the others with big eyes as they came filing back.

When Sam had set the red-faced Christopher down and began to brush him off, her lip trembled. "I thought he was my snow boy," she said.

Christopher stopped crying and looked at her. "Phoebe," he said kindly, "just as soon as we get home I'm going to make a snow boy for you. So be a good girl."

Sam put the other children out at the Church, but he carried Christopher home to be warmed and dried off.

When service was over and the children came scampering home, Phoebe was the first to reach the gate. "My snow boy!" she called joyfully; "he's here, he's here!"

And so he was, for with Sam's help, Christopher had made a wonderful tall snow man with a hat on his head and a cane in his hand.

And so every one was satisfied.

AVOID ACCIDENTS WHILE HUNTING.

Some time ago I read that over 300 persons were killed and 1,500 hurt in this country last year by shooting accidents. You may be surprised to know that 70 out of every 100 of the persons killed or hurt were boys below twenty-one years of age. Most of these accidents were due to carelessness, and not knowing how to handle the gun. Therefore, I am going to give you some rules about hunting and handling a gun which all experienced hunters follow.

1. Do not load your gun until you get to your hunting-place, and be sure to unload it when you have finished hunting. By all means do not carry a loaded gun in the house. Do not think that the gun is unloaded, but know it.

2. Put your gun in your automobile, buggy, wagon, or boat so that it can be pulled out by the butt with the muzzle away from you. A large number of accidents are caused by the hunter drawing the muzzle of the gun toward him. Remember that the only time a muzzle is safe is when it is pointing away from you.

3. Never climb a fence, cross a stream on a log, or climb a tree with your gun loaded. When reaching a fence the gun should be placed on the ground with the butt nearest the lowest rail or strand of wire. After climbing over the fence you can pull the gun through with the butt end first.

4. Many accidents are caused by the hunter stumbling, thereby causing the gun to fire. The first thing to remember, if you should stumble, is to swing the point of the gun in the direction it will do least harm.

5. If you should have occasion to stop when you are hunting, do not rest the gun against a tree or clump of bushes. Put it flat on the ground.—Uncle P. F., in the Progressive Farmer.

SCIENTIFIC WORKER'S FIELD IS SUBMERGED.

The opening of the big Wilson Dam at Muscle Shoals during 1925 will blot out a laboratory of science. Under the direction of Dr. J. Walter Fewkes, chief of the bureau of American ethnonogy of the Smithsonian Institution, Gerrard Fowke, a trained scientific worker, has been exploring Indian mounds at Muscle Shoals that will be covered with water when the big Wilson Dam is put into commission. The relics which Mr. Fowke found are being packed up to be sent to the institution for study. Just what Indian tribe they belonged to remains to be determined.

The Tennessee Valley Historical Society invited Dr. Fewkes to have the mounds explored, and he sent Mr. Fowke to excavate them at the mouth of Town Creek, Colbert County, Ala., some two months ago. Dr. Fewkes also made a trip to the point recently and brought back with him to Washington some of the scientific finds. They include copper ornaments, beads and a species of breastplate, showing, Dr. Fewkes said, that the Indians to whom they belonged prized that metal highly.

Mr. Fowke took two representative mounds and found that one was a large mound of mussel shells and the other a burial mound. The countless shells of mussels, which the Indians apparently took from the Tennessee River, are remains of their feasts. With a variation in the spelling, Dr. Fewkes explained, the fresh-water mussels in that river gave their name to Muscle Shoals. The debris usually found in an Indian village was encountered in the mussel mound, interspersed with flint heads, knives, fragments of pottery and stones used in cooking.

Mr. Fowke, in a report recently submitted to Dr. Fewkes, said many skeletons were unearthed often with big stones weighing twenty to thirty-five pounds placed upon them. On account of the cotton cultivation, he was unable to give the exact height of the mound, but estimated it at nine feet. Traces of a village and of fire used to cook the mussels were found in the vicinity.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

By Rev. S. M. Lynam.

Unemployment.—

The average unemployment in the United States, year in and year out, is 10 to 12 per cent. In numbers, American unemployment affects from one to six million persons.

Italy Subjugates Tripoli.—

According to reports from Rome, Syrte, the city where the rebel chiefs of Tripoli have made their headquarters, has been invested, which marks the completion of the subjugation of the Tripolitan coast. Syrte has been long the center of arms' smuggling, and its capture will greatly aid in the maintenance of order in Tripoli. When Italy entered the war in 1916 it became necessary for her to give up the conquest of Tripoli, but it has recently been resumed with gratifying results, in spite of the fact that much of the wrok which had been done had to be done over again because of the interruption.

Canton Devastated.—

Reports from China declare that the city of Canton, China, is a dead city, so far as commerce is concerned, for many years to come. Its practical destruction is a result of the war between Sun Yat Sen and the local merchants. While Canton lies in ruins, there is still threats of more fighting on both sides, and many refugees are seeking safer localities. During the pillaging and burning, more than five hundred people were murdered, and more than three thousand houses and shops were burned. These are more fruits of war, and greater proof that the Spirit of Jesus is needed in the world. Could we but hear His voice, the turbulent world must needs be silenced. We are His speakers. What do we say? Do we keep silence?

A First Step Made.—

As the first step of a plan of co-operation that is to extend throughout the city, thirteen Churches of St. Paul, Minn., united in a thanksgiving service. Besides the evangelical denominations, the Unitarians, the Universalists, the Swedenborgians and the liberal Hebrews took in the service, which was held in the People's Church, with its pastor, Rev. Howard Y. Williams, presiding. Rabbi L. J. Rothstein offered the prayer, and Dr. J. W. Holland, pastor of the First Methodist Church, was the preacher of the hour. How great a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in peace, and how such thanksgiving services are causes for rejoicing, as they point the way to harmony among the people of God. The Christian Church stands for that unity for which Christ prayed; that unity that existed between Him and the Father.

The Fascisti Struggle for Life.—

The Fascist party in Italy are putting up a desperate struggle for existence. This has been necessitated by the disclosure of a letter from General Balbo, commander of the militia, in which he urged the use of force in the suppression of the Communist forces. Italian newspapers are strong in their denunciations of the government, and Premier Mussolini is put in an embarrassing position. General Balbo has been dismissed, but this does not seem to have palliated the opposition, which is steadily growing stronger, and his dismissal has been received by his personal following with thinly veiled threats of discontent. The Fascisti are facing a critical situation in Italian affairs.

Mexico Inducts a New President.—

On December 1st, Mexico experienced an event which is said to be epoch-making in its character. General Alvaro Obregon retired from the presidency of the Southern republic, and President-Elect Galles was inaugurated. General Obregon closed his four years as Mexico's executive, and allowed his successor to take over the reins of government in peace—a thing which has occurred in that turbulent country only once in the past century of its history. He succeeeded in completing his term of office, which is a feat accomplished by only five of his predecessors, of which there have been some twoscore.

Ex-President Obregon has done much for his country. During his administrations he has resumed diplomatic relations with the United States and with Russia. He has suppressed the De la Huerta rebellion, and has disbanded the undisciplined agrarian and labor units which he used in the suppression of the rebellion. General Obregon will retire to private life, but will stand ready to serve his country at all times.

A Campaign for Better Feeling.—

With the addition of Dr. John W. Herring, former pastor of the First Congregational Church, Terre Haute, Ind., the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is undertaking a definite and positive campaign for the establishment of good will and better understanding between Jews and Christians in this country. Their aims are summarized as follows: to study the causes of ill will; to establish contacts between Jews and Christians in experimental centers; to discover projects in community betterment in which Jews and Christians can co-operate; to watch the press to correct false and irritating statements, and to create a literature for the shaping of a better public opinion on the matter. It is to be the business of the commission headed by Dr. Herring to cope with the anti-semitic movement so prominent in some quarters.

The Temple Emanuel, Duluth, Minn., has been without a rabbi for some time, and during the interim Christian ministers have been asked to preach at the regular Friday evening services. There has been a kindly response, and a kindly reception. This is one of the very hopeful signs pointing the way to a better understanding between the Jews and Christians. Centuries of prejudice are to be broken down, and the task as great. We should give the effort our sympathy, our help, and our prayers.

The Spirit of Helen Keller.—

Having heard of the accident which recently befell Fannie Loptman, Brooklyn, N. Y., who is thirteen years old, crippling her for life, and knowing the bitter days ahead, Hellen Keller, the deaf and blind pioneer woman, so widely known, wrote her: "I have just read in the newspaper about your accident, and I feel I simply must write to you. I am very, very sorry. My heart is full of sympathy and love for the dear, brave little girl who is bearing everything with such sweetness and courage. All my life I have had unusual obstacles to overcome, and in spite of them I have found life beautiful. I have been able to do something for myself and others. You, too, dear Fannie, will learn to find beauty and happiness in the world. Grief and pain are but the soil from which springs the lovely plant, unselfishness. Be gentle and learn how to suffer. When one suffers patiently, one suffers less. I am very much older than you, and many of the secrets of life which you will only learn little by little have been revealed to me. Believe me, dear, the future is shaped out of the past. Whatever you can do to live bravely without impatience, and without complaining, will help you to live some future day in joyful contentment. When trouble first comes, we do not know what to do with it. We are bewildered. But after a little while we learn our new part—the thing we can do best—and we take up the task God puts into our hands with a smile in our hearts. I am sending you the story of my life because I hope it may encourage you. You will see that even deafness and blindness are obstacles that can be overcome." When we read such a letter, we wonder no longer why or how Helen Keller is great. She is great because her spirit is great, because her courage is great. We have quoted her letter here because we feel that so many of us need it at times graven upon the tables of our hearts. Her message will stand us in good stead as we face seemingly unsurmountable difficulties, as all of us must sometimes. This courage, this faith is based in an unquestioning reliance upon the power of God to achieve through her.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw has fourth Sunday open for service. Please write him if your Church needs a pastor. His address is Walters, Va.

At the First Christian Church, the pageant, "Following the Star," by Mrs. W. T. Walters, will be given next Sunday evening, December 21.

Would you not like to have one of the American Standard Bibles advertised in THE SUN? A teacher's Bible or a scholar's Bible would make a good present to your friend.

The fifth anniversary of the organization of the Sunday School of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., will be held January 4, 1925, Dr. W. C. Wicker being principal speaker.

The children's Christmas exercises of the Sunday School of the First Christian Church will be held on Tuesday evening, December 23d, under the direction of the S. S. entertainment committee.

Order your copy of "Peloubet's Select Notes" through THE CHRISTIAN SUN. There is no book so well suited to help one in the study of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons. Price, by mail, $2.00.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide" gives a full discussion of the International Uniform Sunday School Lessons by departments. It is well adapted to the several grades. Send your order to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Price, by mail, $2.00.

Rev. V. T. Crawford seems to be beginning his work well with the Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Church. Thirty-three names have been added to the membership of the Church since he began the work, and a very successful and happy revival has recently been conducted. The Sunday School is also rapidly developing into one of large and enthusiastic proportions.

Prof. J. N. Dales and wife, of Drayton, Onterio, Canada, have been constrained by the Board of Management of the Ministers' Home, of Lakemont, N. Y., to take charge of the Ministers' Home and undertake the duties of superintendent and matron, respectively. One who knows these good people will have no hesitency in declaring the choice a wise one. It will mean much to the Ministers' Home to have Bro. and Sister Dales in charge of that institution.

Our South Norfolk congregation, under the able and enthusiastic leadership of Rev. O. D. Poythress, is making progress in erecting the new and ample Church building. Even with this program on, which means enormous sacrifices on the part of this congregation, the Sunday School of the Church has voted to double its monthly offering to missions during the coming year. This is the kind of faith that carries a devoted people through a trying ordeal. It is the kind of faith that helps all Sunday Schools that undertake in this way.

In 1823 Noah Webster, compiler of the dictionary, was so hard up for cash to carry on his great work that he asked friends and acquaintances to buy a small volume he wrote called "Letters to a Young Gentleman Concerning his Education." Its retail price was $1.25. In one begging letter, he said: "My dictionary has cost me twenty-six years of labor and about $30,000. If I succeed I shall reimburse myself and be able to compensate all my friends for their advances. If I should not, I shall be left in my old age wit hsmall means for subsistence."

Rev. Herman C. Caviness, who was ordained to the Christian ministry in our State Conference at Raleigh, is a busy evangelist, and the Lord seems to be using him in great power. He began a series of meetings under the auspices of the Christian Church at Clayton, N. C., December 14th, with the expectation of extending the meeting until January, the Lord willing. Here's hoping and praying that great good shall be accomplished and many souls won to a saving knowledge of our Lord through these meetings.
edge of our Lord through these meetings.

The pulpit of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., was filled by Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, last Sunday morning. The audience was much pleased with his highly instructive sermon. At the evening hour the audience enjoyed an illustrated lecture. The pictures shown included THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Christian Orphanage, the burning of Elon College, the new Elon, the mountain work in Carroll County, Va., mission fields in Japan and Porto Rico, and home mission Churches aided by the Southern Christian Convention, including the First Church of Richmond.

St. Luke's Christian Church, Dover, Del., Rev. R. S. Stephens, pastor, has recently held a series of revival services in which there were eight professions of faith in Christ and eight accessions to the Church. The Sunday School of this Church voted in October to give one Sunday's offering per month to missions, thus joining the list of our loyal and wide-awake schools who are making great things possible in our missionary endeavor and program. The Church has also recently organized a Ladies' Aid Society with twenty members. Dr. Stephen's hearth is much improved, and the effects of his good work are being shown in the upward look in all departments of the Church.

The Christian Church was well represented at the Federal Council, in Atlanta, December 3-9. Those attending were Dr. Frank G. Coffin, president of the General Convention; Dr. J. F. Burnett, secretary; Dr. W. H. Denison, secretary of stewardship; Dr. Omer S. Thomas, secretary of home missions; Dr. W. P. Minton, secretary of foreign missions; Dr. Martin Summerbell, president of Starkey Seminary; Dr. L. E. Smith, president of Southern Convention; Dr. W. W. Staley, associate editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; Dr. S. L. Beougher, president of Bethlehem College, and J. O. Atkinson, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. From the great meetings held at the council and marvelous sermins and addresses, these brethren should carry many good ideas and much inspiration into the work of our own communion.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Dr. Atkinson will preach at Mt. Auburn the second Sunday in January, 1925, at 11 A. M. If any of the Churches of my charge desire to have preaching while I am away this winter, they can, of course, make their own arrangements. Rev. Jas. L. Foster, Elon College, has kindly offered to aid, as he has no appointments for the first, third and fourth Sundays.

EVERY MEMBER A SANTA CLAUS.

December 18, 1924.

Dear Santa Claus:
Please, Santa Claus, don't forget The Christian Sun, 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Va. M. EDITOR.

In the Southern Christian Convention there are 10,000 families represented in the Christian Church; less than one-third receive THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the other two-thirds do not—that is to say, only one member in ten reads his Church paper. What is to be done about it?

A few "ifs" and "becauses"—

If the pastor's salary is unpaid, it is because too few families take the Church paper. Who is the logical person to look after these non-subscribers?

If the Conference apportionments are not paid, it is because too few members take the Church paper. Again, who can best broach the subject of becoming a subscriber?

If the missionary and educational interests of your Church are at a low ebb, it is because too many families fail to take their Church paper. Who, now, is responsible?

If your Sunday School is lifeless and unsuccessful, it is because your officers and teachers do not take and read their Church paper. Who elects or appoints these officers, and why are they chosen?

If your Church is cold and indifferent, it is because more members need the warning influence of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Should a personal appeal be made, in addition to a public appeal, for subscriptions?

Again—

If your Church means anything to you, ask yourself what it is; and if you mean anything to your Church, ask yourself what it is. Repeat the question over and over, "What is it?" till you find the answer.

Now— put THE CHRISTIAN SUN on the list of home necessities, and read it. Seek to build up your Church interests.

GUESTS MOST WELCOME.

Long distinguished though Atlanta has been as a gathering place for great Conventions, it was never before her privilege to entertain a company at once so broadly and so highly representative as the delegates and visitors now assembled for the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. They stand not only for impressive numbers, but also for potent and creative ideas.

It means much that they represent forty-five million Christians of America and constitute the world's largest group of evangelical Churches. It means more that, with thoughtful and generous purpose, they are devoted to the bringing in of that better hope of humankind, for which men of good will, the earth around, now labor, and of which the wisest spirits have ever prophesied.

The city's warmest welcome goes forth to each guest within her gates, and particularly to those from far lands across the seas, who have come bearing witness to a brotherhood broader than nations and deeper than creed.—Atlanta Journal.

QUESTIONS ON CHURCH-GOING.

"Why do people refuse to go to Church?" is the question asked in a letter sent to all members of the Episcopal Church of St. Luke, in Philadelphia. Dr. David M. Steele, rector, said nine-tenths of Church members stay away because they do not want to attend. He wants them to say why they do not want to attend. He declared he could not understand people who want the credit of being Christians "but whose habits and customs of life are such that the Church might as well not exist."

TWELVE INTERNATIONAL MOVEMENTS.

By Rev. R. F. Brown, M. A.

I. UNIVERSAL QUEST OF FREEDOM.

Freedom is not a dream, a theory, nor a fallacy. Liberty is not license, neither can it be made up of negotiations. Freedom from the bondage of law is not release from the obligation of duty. There are worst indictments against slavery than the fact that it imposes restrictive measures and irksome tasks. Slavery makes men servile; and servility is a base travesty against the very nature of man.

This movement toward freedom first finds expression in the individual. The desire for freedom is inherent in the human heart, universal in its appeal, and powerful in its grasp upon humanity. It is because of this fact that the movement has traveled so rapidly and will finally become a universal reality. Its boundaries are destined to be marked only by the limits of the world. To the appeal and challenge of such a movement, the heart of man responds without hesitation. It could not be otherwise. To all students of history and life, it is perfectly clear that the social instincts and impulses of man crave and demand the joy of personal freedom to the same degree and in the same uncompromising manner that his physical nature craves and demands food. And without the fulfillment of this desire, man is incomplete. Freedom is an essential element in human life. But a person may enjoy physical freedom and yet be a captive. His intellect may be keen, grasping, and far-reaching, and still a person may be a prisoner. Knowledge may point the accusing finger at the man who possesses it. Ignorance may become the mother of spiritual slaves. He who would not become the victim of slavery must look well to the use he makes of his liberty and possessions. Knowing, being, and doing may enslave man's soul; and no man is free whose soul is under bondage.

Not until man was able to enlarge on the conceptions of the primitive man touching freedom was he successful in initiating a constructive movement which had an ethical, moral, spiritual and social bearing on life. To mention a few of these movements will fulfill the purpose of this article.

One of the social experiments, the influence of which has been felt from the days of the early Roman empire, ancient Egypt and Russian czarism to the present day, is the gradual rising resentment and successful warfare against the enslavement of humanity. Wherever and whenever in the history of the world there has been a growing conviction that one man has no right to own another or direct the career and fortunes and destiny of another, a movement started then and there—although it may have found lodgment in a single heart—to bring liberty to the man whose freedom was invaded and whose rights were disregarded by others. The feeling of responsibility for others gave rise to this prohibitive social experiment. It is such a fellow-feeling of kindred relationship and the assurance that man is responsible in more ways than one for the freedom and happiness of other men that made possible the outlawry of slavery. Man has entered into this and many other heritages without reckoning the cost that some one paid to make them possible.

From a purely social standpoint, to say nothing of the other aspects of it, slavery has always been wrong; and that which is wrong always meets defeat. Under the harsh rules of the Roman empire, slavery flourished and human life was cheap. There was no social life or social equality for woman. She had no choice in marriage, no authority over her children; but, like a beast of burden, she was regarded as common property, held in contempt by her husband, and was unable to extricate herself from his tutelage and domineering power. And what was true of the Roman empire was also true of other empires.

The ruthless enslavement and heartless destruction of child-life which characterized the Roman empire in the primitive days of the Christian era is a fact very difficult to accept were it not in perfect harmony with the trend of that ruthless, heartless, and bloody age. And we look back upon the awful deeds of these people with a feeling of disgust; and while a lump rises in our throats and our blood runs cold as we think of the total disregard for child-life in the long-ago, we sit still and allow human slavery to flourish today in this fair land. In the days before the Christian era, men were allowed to remain in bondage and suffer at the hands of the overlords. Behold the galley slaves working in the ships of Rome and Egypt. They were chained to the oars by the wrist and compelled to work at their irksome task, keeping time to the beating of a hammer in the hand of the chief slave-driver. Under the dread of the whip wielded by other slave-drivers, these men were kept straining at the oars; but in times of battle they were driven by the instinct of self-preservation. They had no freedom until the friendly hand of death snatched them from their tasks, or from overexertion they became unconscious. Then the slave-driver cut off the hand and threw the slave overboard, dead or alive, and chained another slave in the place of the one cut loose. We rejoice that an awakened conscience has made such awful deeds by such intrepid people impossible. But is all of humanity set free?

A heart-sickening picture is given of the Russian slaves who worked in the mines opened by Peter the Great. In his book, "Pagan and Christian Creeds," Carpenter says there were many slaves in the Russian mines, some of them criminals, many of them condemned, and many were innocent. They were chained to their wheelbarrows day and night. They, too, never knew freedom until they died beside their wheelbarrow, or until sickness made it impossible for them to stagger at their terrible task. Such was the life of the common man under the czars of Russia. Our souls rebel at such a life. But, again I ask, do the people of the world have freedom today? Is America guiltless?

In the middle ages we find that certain classes had no more liberty, and life was held no more sacred than under the harsh rules of the Roman empire and the reckless sway of the Russian czars. But the enslavement of one man by another man was not sanctioned by the Creator; and in spite of the non-Christian philosophic system which developed an order of life void of a conscience and which could not see the wrong wrought by the enslavement of humanity, the leavening force of a social impulse surged for expression and began to purge the polluted social order, driving out the spirit of inequality, and making it impossible for the black-hearted profiteers and clamorers for gain to barter in human flesh, or relegate to the low level of an animal the beautiful handiwork of God as expressed in the childhood, womanhood and manhood of the world. Again we rejoice because of the hopeful changes brought about. While conditions in the Roman galley, the Russian mines, and the Egyptian lands have been changed by the awakened conscience of such rulers as Constantine and Justinian, and others; and while human slavery, oppression and the ruthless destruction of human life are matters of history; while the ancient scenes of inhumanity have been changed to scenes of equality of social life and, in some places, equality of opportunity; while the peerless and untiring spirit of Washington led to a successful consummation the terrible conflict between the will of a king and the wish of stalwart souls for religious freedom; and while Lincoln, whose soul was oppressed by the enslavement of humanity in America, led other stout hearts in an awful war between the States which ended in the emancipation of a million souls; and while in America and in other parts of the world there is a praiseworthy emergence of womanhood and a complacent ecstacy over the opportunities afforded the childhood and youth of the world, there are yet exposed to human gaze many sad scenes. Behold the China's time-worn custom of binding the children's feet, and the ruthless and heartless exposure of babyhood; the polygamy, concubinage, the laxity of marriage relations, not only by the Mohammedans, but by the citizens of civilized and so-called Christianized nations; the unwillingness of the Hindus to grant women the right to obtain an education; the Hindus' sanction and encouragement of child-marriage; their low social standard which places woman far below the place she occupied in the Aryan race of long ago, degrading her more and more in spite of that system of philosophy and literature which rebels at the suggestion that these people be classified among the barbarous nations.

The advance of civilization and the climb out of the dark ages and middle ages have not eliminated the greatest crime of the world. Who is it with a heart softer than stone can live in this so-called enlightened twentieth century and not think daily of the two million little slaves in the United States? The greatest social tragedy in the world, to say nothing of its economic aspects and its civic phases, is the fact that two million little hearts are engaged in hard labor in America! It is the greatest crime any country has ever perpetrated against the social impulse of humanity and against the hope of civilization. These children were born with free spirits, but these spirits have been curbed by the profiteers whose purses are fat with unholy gain, and whose fingers are dripping with the red blood of innocent life. The tired, unskilled, untutored, overworked, used-up childhood of America is a shame on our civilization. If the vitality and social impulses of these children are ground up into dividends for the captains of industry, they can never make a contribution to our social order, but will become a liability to the world. One of the greatest contributions we can make to the world is the moderate, purposeful direction of the social instincts of our children. This cannot be done so long as they are allowed to work in conditions that are disgraceful, where their lungs are filled with dust and dirt, lights poor, ventilation poor, and the social conditions degrading. Surely the emergence of childhood should be the watchword of our time. A national interest has been stimulated in hogs, corn, cotton, and wheat and trees. Why should not the United States place a man in the President's Cabinet who would stimulate a national interest in the childhood of America, so that when an amendment to the Constitution is offered for the protection of our children, it would be supported by the people and the lawmakers?

The interest of the people of America and the world is less positive and less intense than that of our forefathers, or even the ancients, in the freedom of humanity. In other days, men of courage and influence protested with all their souls against the enslavement of humanity; but today there is an apathy that is nothing less than apalling. What is the effect of this apathy upon the social organism?

I want to speak very plainly, but positively, regarding the present-day indifference to the en-

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL.

CHRISTIAN SUN readers have picked up from the press already many fragmentary reports of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which held its fifth quadrennial meeting in Atlanta, Ga., December 3-9. No single article, however long, can adequately portray to the reader either the spirit, the message, or the full meaning of this meeting. The general theme of the Council was the Church in the world, and from the moment that that great Christian statesman, Robert E. Speer, president, called the meeting to order at 2:30 P. M., December 3d, till the gavel fell for the closing, at 1 P. M., Tuesday, December 9th, the supreme thought in the mind of those who were in the meeting seemed to be, "What can be done through the Churches to win the whole world to Christ and to make Christ operative in all the thought, life and activity of the world?" The personnel of the council was impressive. Not only were the most distinguished and outstanding lights of the pulpit there to speak, but men and women from various and sundry walks of life, whose names are more than nation-wide and who have won renown in their respective occupations, not only through their scholarship and eloquence, but through their allegiance to Christ and their advocacy of the Christ-life. It is to be doubted if America has a clearer thinker on the truly great problems of our religious life and of our international relationships than Robert E. Speer, writer of many books and an orator who grips and holds his audience by the sheer force of his clear thinking and his great conceptions of each theme he treats. Rev. S. Parks Cadman, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., was elected to succeed Dr. Speer as president of the council, since one is only eligible to one term. In the person of Dr. Cadman, the council not only has a brilliant scholar, but one whose heart is burdened with the needs and problems of men, and whose voice gives utterance to its needs in a manner at once inspiring and enlightening. The Rt. Hon. Sir Willoughby Dickinson, of London, a former member of Parliament and a great thinker in world terms, was there and delivered a great address, using as his topic "The Church Universal, the Hope for World Peace."

Rev. K. Tsunashima, of Tokyo, Japan, was there to tell the council of the critical hour now striking in Japan. And Dr. Samuel M. Zwemerr, of Cairo, Egypt, was there with a marvelous message portraying the fact that, with a united front, we may win a new Moslem world. Hon. Wm. Jennings Bryan was there with a stirring message on "The Church and World Peace." Prof. Jas. T. Shotwell, of Columbia University, director of the Carnegie endowment for international peace, was there with a message of light and inspiration on "How to Outlaw War." Governor William E. Sweet, of Colorado, was there with a thrilling message on "Christianizing Our International Relations." Supreme Court Judge Florence E. Allen, the only woman on the Supreme Court bench in the United States, was there with a judicial and legal discussion of how war may be and must be stopped. And scores of others with messages equally gripping were there. Bishops, archbishops, prelates and preachers of righteousness of national and international reputation.

The council is held, as SUN readers know, through reports, platform utterances, sermons, orations and discussions were evangelism, Christian education, prohibition, race relationships, war, international justice and good will, and kindred themes.

It is safe to say that because of the wisdom of these utterances and discussions, and because they are fundamental in all our Church life and thinking, their impact and influence will be felt, not only in the Christian Churches in America, but in the world, for years to come. In the great light of the Conference, many were made to see light as they never had seen it before, and from the published bulletins and reports and books growing out of the congregation, the Church will have an asset that cannot be computed. No word of hesitancy, of doubt, of agnosticism, of so-called modernism, was uttered during the whole council; but messages that rang clear, triumphant and victorious from the Book of God setting forth and holding up to the world as its only hope, to use Dr. Cadman's phrase in his marvelous council message, "Jesus, the Christ, the fruit of the virgin's womb." The council emphasized and sent out to the world a clear message of redemption and of that light which came, and which we have with us, "that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

MEMOIRS AND CONFERENCES.

The writer has been attending our Conferences and Conventions for many a day, and enjoying them. Almost every session attended has witnessed the appointment of a special committee on memoirs, once or twice on necrology (forget it, please), who are expected to formulate laudatory phrases respecting deceased leaders, ministerial for the most part, but also occasionally lay, introduce the same as resolutions, and then as many as will are granted the floor to pronounce eulogies on the deceased.

The eulogies, equally with the resolutions of respect, portray their lack of preparation and of serious effort at evaluation of the departed friend. Usually the eulogies take the form of how long the deceased was known and how intimate the speaker's association has been with him, and other such trivialities of reminiscence. We submit we ought to find a better way to give public recognition and place to our deceased leaders. We should also be willing to eulogize women as well as men in these assemblies.

Here is the plan we suggest. Let the committee on memoirs be a regular, standing committee, whose duty it shall be to prepare in advance a well-conceived statement of the essential facts and life-service of the deceased. They should then select some one qualified by knowledge and association and willing to do so to pronounce the eulogy, having in mind to evaluate the contribution of the deceased to the cause of Christ and His kingdom. The program committee should be notified of the selection and the speaker listed on the regular program. The eulogy should in every case be written and then printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and in the case of great leaders, like Dr. Barrett and Dr. Long, and Rev. W. G. Clements, preserved in "The Christian Annual."

We hope our Conferences and our Conventions will ponder these suggestions well, and that they will result in a more appropriate service of commemoration for our fallen leaders in pulpit and pew, not forgetting the women of our Church who really bear more of the burden of our work and prayers in many cases than do our men.

AN INSANE AGE.

Modern efficiency and speeding-up are driving this generation mad, cry the alarmists. Our asylums are overcrowded, our jails are full, we can't build hospitals fast enough to care for the mental and physical wrecks of this speed-mad civilization.

We pay too heavily for our scientific improvements and high-pressure methods. Civilization is like a runaway engine, making fast time but bound for destruction.

Jazz mania, sex abnormalities, mob hysterias, and the flouting of all the conventions are the inevitable consequence, we are told. The only hope for the race is to go back to the simplicity, yes, even the crudeness and discomfort, of the life of our fathers.

But, wait a minute, let us examine the actual conditions a little more closely. Travel at sixty miles an hour never put any man in an asylum, and there is no more immorality in flying through the air than in running along the surface of the earth. Exposed plumbing is not vicious, electric lights are not demoralizing, and a sermon heard over the radio may be just as uplifting as though heard in a Church. The automobile, in itself, is not a contrivance of the devil, and the traveling crane and pneumatic hammer are not tools of diabolism.

It is rather interesting to note that every advance in human power and comfort has been met with this kind of a complaint. In 1832 a group of men in Lancaster, Ohio, asked the school board for the use of the school-house in which to hold a meeting to promote a railroad in the vicinity. The board answered by letter as follows:

"You are at liberty to use the school-house to hold meetings for all proper purposes. But railroad and telegraphs are impossible and rank infidelity. If God had intended His intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of sixteen miles an hour, He would clearly have foretold it in the holy prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls down to hell."

What are the facts concerning modern life?

A fair day's work never hurt any normal man. The fact that a man, by the use of machinery, can move a hundred tons of pig-iron where in times past he could only move ten, does not produce a deleterious effect upon his mind or morals. The fact that a business manager, by use of telephones, telegraphs, pneumatic tubes, dictaphones, typewriters and calculating machines, can accomplish more in one day than his father could in a week, does not wear his nerves to a frazzle.

The truth is that the creeping mental and moral paralysis that is threatening our civilization is due more to bootleg whiskey, all-night bridge, midnight jazz, overindulgence in rich and highly spiced foods, unventilated rooms, sheer avarice and cupidity, uncontrolled passion and lust, inordinate ambition, and an overweening desire to outshine our neighbors, than to all the speed and efficiency the world has known.

Here is where our schools have a significant work to do, by teaching our children that the prizes of life are not money and power and place, nor are its satisfactions found in excitement, nervous stimulus and hysteria; that things purchased at the cost of health or honor are too dear; and that true satisfaction consists in health of body, peace of heart, serenity of spirit, a mind well stored with lofty sentiments and unselfish thoughts, a soul made strong by faith and love, whereby a man is beloved of children, honored by the aged, is master of himself in any company, is at home in the woods or by the sea, finds companionship in a good book and is happy alone under the stars, counts his wealth not in dollars but in the affection of his employees and associates and the consciousness of a clean life well lived, whose heart beats true, whose nerves vibrate with life, whose sleep is as deep and wholesome as a little child's, and who looks levelly into the eyes of every man. A simple, wholesome, normal, natural existence. So to live, is life.—New Age Magazine.

GOD'S GIFT TO THE WORLD.

The Christmas season is upon us. It manifests itself in a number of ways. The shop windows have taken on a holiday aspect with their attractive window displays, featuring Christmas-gift suggestions. The mail-carriers are laden down with extra mail and packages, many of them bearing Christmas seals and Christmas colors. There are "secrets" among the members of the household as they plan surprises for other members of the household. There are places that are "tabu" because of hidden gifts which have been bought in keeping with the slogan, "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early." The boys and girls show that there is more truth than fiction in the poem, "Just Before Christmas," for they are "as good as they can be." There is even a different atmosphere in the community. There is no mistaking the fact that Christmas is coming. And, of course, this is a good thing.

But we must take care lest, in all the stress and strain of the pre-Christmas season, and in all the activities of the Christmas season, we do not miss the significance of Christmas itself. We need to keep in mind the significance of the day by reminding ourselves of what it stands for. We need to re-emphasize the fact that had it not been for the first Christmas gift, there would not have been any other "Christmases" worth while. Christmas today gets its significance from the fact that there was a Christmas that had significance nineteen hundred years ago. Any giving which is worthy of the name is simply the human expression of Him who was the first Christmas gift, and who was known as the Great Giver.

The Great Giver! What a paradox! He was born of an humble and poor ancestry which sprang from a generally hated race. He was reared in obscurity and in comparative poverty. He never went beyond the borders of a little province that had been the "football" for many years for great empires. He never led an army, painted a picture, captured a city, wrote a book. So far as we have any record, He never gave a dollar to charity. And yet He was and is known as the Great Giver. With Nicodemus of old, we say, "How can these things be?"

Reflection will show that this humble man deserves the honor that we have bestowed upon Him in calling Him the Great Giver. For He has given us that which is far more than material things; He has given us spiritual ideals and life. In three particulars at least His gift has significance.

1. He gave us our highest conception or revelation of God. God had revealed Himself in nature, in history, even in part in man. But in Jesus Christ He revealed Himself in His fullness. One of man's most pressing questions has been as to the nature of God. And in Jesus Christ once and for all that question finds an answer. "He that hath seen me," said Jesus, "hath seen the Father." He who wants to know anything about God, needs only to study the gospels to learn what He most needs to know. Or, better still, he needs only to have Jesus Christ in His fullness to know God. And there is significance in this fact. When God wanted to reveal Himself in His fullness, He did it through a man. God comes to His fullest revelation when the word is made flesh.

2. He gave us our highest conception of man. Men were not thought much of in Jesus' time. Little value was placed upon their lives. Their personality was not sacred. But Jesus Christ gave the world a new conception of man and a new value of human personality. Here is one of the most helpful gifts which Jesus made, for not only did He show us what God was like; He also showed us what man ought to be. He revealed something of the possibilities of manhood. He affirmed and embodied His spiritual nature, and He bore testimony to His spiritual destiny. The revelation of man's worth has been one of the most transforming ideals in the history of the world. And the end is not yet, for every modern humanitarian movement is the outgrowth of this idea and ideal.

3. And finally He gave us a new conception of life. He showed us that it is not a cup to be drained, but a measure to be filled. It has more than one dimension—length; it has breadth and heighth and depth. It does not consist in the abundance of things a man possesses; but in these finer qualities of mind and heart, in character values that are eternal. Life has never been the same, it never can be the same, since Jesus came with His great gift.

This Christmas, therefore, ought to call us back to the meaning of Christmas. It ought to remind us again of the first Christmas Gift. And that ought to remind us of the Giver and the spirit in which the gift was made. And that ought to prompt us, like the wise men of old, to worship the Gift and the Giver, and to give that most precious of all gifts, the gift of ourselves, to the Father who loved the whole world so much that He gave His only begotten Son, and the Son who loved so much that He gave Himself, that we might have life and have it more abundantly.

HEARTY RECOGNITION.

During my visit at Burlington, in 1922, I was wonderfully impressed with the delightful home atmosphere of our Southern brethren. Their chivalrous spirit has found wonderful expression in their Elon College and the Orphanage. They have suffered little children to come unto them. They have provided a home for those who have none, and that is well.

Brethren of the South, there are those around whom the shadows are deepening. They have wrought well while it was yet day, but the night has come, and they cannot do more. They have God and—us. In prayer, effectual and fervent, they are carrying forward our beloved Zion, and our denominational life will be the richer because of their intercession.

May the light that never failed on sea or land show us the vision of this great day of our opportunity to crown our friends at Lakemont with the riches of our warmest sympathy.

It is by the soul only that nations are great. We feel that the spirit of the South will only be satisfied when it has taken to its heart this haven on the hill at Lakemont. And how wonderful that our brotherhood, North and South, has this bond of common interest and sympathy! And this great comradeship may be bigger and broader yet, for surely the home will not be the poorer if, above the fireplace in our friends' rest-room, the folds of the cross of St. George mingle with the Stars and Stripes of Old Glory. We are workers together with Him. J. N. Dalls.

OCEAN'S INFLUENCE ON WEATHER.

The influence which the ocean has upon the weather is very great. "The study of the waters of the oceans," declares Lieutenant-Commander George E. Brandt, of the U. S. Navy, "will yield results worth millions of dollars to the agriculture and industry of the nation, because from this study we can get a better understanding of the weather, and will probably be able to predict the weather a year in advance, especially the periods of rainfall and drouth and their duration." Commander Brandt says that the waters of the ocean are a great reservoir for storing and distributing the heat which comes from solar radiation. During each hour of sunshine more heat is being added to this great reservoir. This heat in turn is given off again by the ocean, influencing very materially the weather over land and sea. Observations made by the Smithsonian Institution show that the radiation of the sun varies considerably from time to time. It is this variation, says Commander Brandt, which makes the study of weather so complicated. "Since the waters of the ocean act as an intermediate reservoir," he says, "the full effect of a change in solar radiation is not felt until some years after the change takes place. The weather for the years 1925-27 has already been largely determined by the heat stored in the waters from solar radiation during the years 1921-24."

THE CALL OF THE STARS.

By Rev. V. T. Crawford.

On a night when the sky is full of stars—
Great stars, small stars, dim and bright,
I love to watch their glimmering light.
As each twinkling star-ray falls,
To my heart there's something that calls—
'Tis the majestic call of the silent night.

Then my full heart answers the call
That comes from the heavens afar,
And 'tis sweet, because 'tis the call of the star
That has come to help show me the way—
To inspire the night, as greater things, the day;
To soothe, and to lure me from care.

It speaks to my lonely heart of the One
Who, through the star-light's glimmering call,
Bids me never despair, nor faint, nor fall;
But like the star patiently, ceaselessly burn,
Calling other bewildered travelers to return—
And find with me, and the stars, the source of all.

If a man were to put into his religion the same enthusiasm he puts into his sports, what a world this would be!

BETHLEHEM LETTER.

The Needs of the College.

There is a feeling abroad in our Church that, since Bethlehem College is an established institution, it can take care of itself, or that Alabama, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences can take care of it.

Bethlehem College is a child in our family of colleges of the whole Christian Church. Do we bring children into this world and let them, in their infancy, take care of themselves? If we did, it would be better for them if they had never been born, and so would it be with Bethlehem College. It is not a child of Randolph County, of Alabama, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences, nor alone of the Southern Christian Convention; but the whole Church, and the General Christian Convention has admitted it into the Convention as such. It is not, as some suppose, a liability on the Church; but a great asset to our extreme Southern work and the Church at large. These Southern Conferences alone are not financially able to support Bethlehem College.

The comparative report of the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention shows that Alabama, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences have forty-two Churches, valued at $129,700, with a membership of 3,444, and that they paid to the Conference fund $1,070.53; that they have 26 preachers, whose salaries amounted to $7,-457.09, and that they paid for all purposes $22,-773.30, as compared with Eastern Virginia Conference, Eastern North Carolina Conference, Virginia Valley Central Conference, Western North Carolina Conference, North Carolina and Virginia Conference, which have 177 Churches, valued at $1,553,022, with a membership of 23,-915, which paid last year to Conference fund $16,575.83, have 80 preachers, whose salaries aggregate $83,657.11; total for all purposes, $407,-348.82. The total amount paid in by the Alabama, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences is 5 per cent of the total paid for all purposes of all the other Conferences, their property valuation is less than 1 per cent of all the other properties, 14 per cent of the membership, 8 per cent of pastor's salary, and 6 per cent of what is paid as Conference fund by the Conferences.

We have 107 students in Bethlehem College, and 329 in Elon, which is 30 per cent of the number in Elon. It will be impossible for us to meet our running expenses on what we take in from the students and our 12 per cent appropriation from the Men and Millions, and the few dollars we get from our make-believe endowment of $12,500, and from what little we get from the Alabama, and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. We will take in, all told, this year through the student body $5,100, and our actual running expenses this year will be not less than $10,000. Our student body will be increased next year to not less than 250, so we will need at least $12,000 from stable sources to run the school.

Our people here are nearly all rural folk. Many of them own no property, while others have property valued at from one to five thousand dollars, which brings them a very small remuneration. We must have a larger endowment, and one that pays the interest due, and not one to show up to meet State requirements, and does not produce the interest money which it seems to on the face. We need the showing, but we need the cash much more.

The Southern Christian Convention is making a strenuous effort to erect much-needed Churches in our larger cities, contributing many thousands of dollars to this enterprise, which is very commendable indeed, but here is a more needy field for missionary educational work, and which will be just as fruitful in lasting results as any work done in any city in the United States. We have a population as large as many of our so-called large cities, in our nearby counties, and very few high schools, possibly none, measuring up to the advantages to be gotten out of Bethlehem Academy. We have in Randolph, Chambers, Clay, Tallapoosa, and Coosa Counties, a population of 135,428.

My plea is for the Southern Christian Convention and entire Church to get behind this proposition, which fulfills a long-felt need of the Christian Church, with gifts aggregating at least $50,-000 for the immediate use of Bethlehem College at Wadley, Ala., and if the Church does, she will be able to look back a few years hence with pride upon the work she has been willing to sacrifice to bring to pass; but if not, she will look back in the years to come with everlasting regret.

TWELVE INTERNATIONAL MOVEMENTS.

slavement of humanity and the effects of this indifference upon life. In the first place, the present-day attitude toward the social crime of human enslavement is phycologically disastrious. The darkest hour of any child's life is the time when he realizes that his liberty has been sold to another, his waking hours tormented by the humdrum of the wheels of industry, and his whole life jeopardized by the chilling thought of daily toil. It is certain to squelch that virtuous, inborn instinct to engage in wholesome, invigorating play, burries forever those phycological powers which lead to self-control, self-direction, ability to lead, and willingness to follow. That which would contribute to his social training, develop an amiable approach, and give zest to the whole life has been curbed by the ambitions of unrighteous men. I am not saying that the child should not be taught to work. Lack of training for some vocation will prove as disastrous to the child as overwork in the industrial centers. The play-life of the child is inborn; the industrial life of the child must be cultivated. And the laxity of parents in teaching their children to work is just as harmful to civilization as the ambitions of the captains of industry to grind the child's liberty into dividends. My great problem right now, as a father, is that of teaching my boy that it is just as important for him to work as it is for him to play. With great delight, he builds on my desk his little garage of blocks, he erects in one corner of my study a tent and builds an imaginary camp-fire in another part of the room. He clips from the papers and magazines pictures of automobiles and other machinery, and scatters these bits of paper over the room. In doing this he is following the instincts of an inborn impulse. It is not only a joy to him to engage in this play, but it is a delight to his father to watch him. But when I desire the use of the desk, and request him to gather up the pieces of paper, the boards, and the blocks, he thinks of the procedure as work. To him it is a far cry from his previous actions, but to me it is the proper linking of his play-life with his work-life. And from this he will learn the lesson of other useful engagements. It has a great psycological effect on him. Contrast this with the employment of childhood under eighteen years of age under the direction of men who are unable to think of the rights of childhood. This type of employment deprives the child of the proper measure of schooling, recreation and healthy development. Indifference and child labor are twins—whether found in the cotton mills of the south, in the industrial centers of the Middle West, or in the New England States.

What is the psycological effect upon the womanhood of America when we learn that last year fifty thousand girls dropped out of society and out of virtuous life never to reappear on the stage of self-respect and virtuous action? What is the trouble with our social organism? It is this: We have trusted some of our children to the unholy direction of the industrial centers, and the rest of them we have trusted to the unsound public school system, the theater, the moving picture, and the dance hall. No wonder there is an unsurpassable chasm between the parents and their children! No wonder our boys and girls are not making a commendable contribution to our civilization! Our present methods of child-employment, child-training, and child-entertainment have resulted in a mob psychology. This thing has undermined our social organism, and, if not checked, will undermine our civilization.

The modern attitude toward the enslavement of humanity is economically impracticable. I am thinking now of the thousands of little children in the great State of Massachusetts who are engaged in gainful occupation, of the one hundred and eighty-five thousand in all New England who are now watching the shuttle, packing the goods, and doing whatever their unskilled, innocent hands can do. I am thinking of the fifty-seven per cent of the children from thirteen to sixteen years of age in the Shenadoah district who are working in the breakers. According to the report of the Children's Bureau, the condition there is a disgrace to our civilization. The report says: "These boys work in the constant roar which the coal makes as it rushes down the chute. . . . Black coal-dust is everywhere, covering the windows, and filling the lungs of the workers. The slate is sharp, so the slate-pickers often cut or bruise their hands; the coal is carried down the chute in water, and this means sore and swollen hands for the little workers. The first few weeks after the boy begins work, his fingers bleed almost continually." There are many other sections of our country that duplicate this terrible condition. This sort of thing would kindle less wrath in the hearts and minds of the people were it confined to countries of less civilization and refinement than that of which we boast in America; and were it not for the further fact of its effect upon our economic life. The State that sits idly by and watches these young lives ground out will some day be called upon to take care of some of these children. People will be called on to pay taxes to support the courts for trying some of these boys for crimes which had their incipiency in these uncouth, unrefined, non-moral factories and other industrial centers. America is permitting a practice which is gradually but surely placing an economic burden on our civilization. This is an age of juvenile dependence and juvenile crime. It would be much cheaper to take our boys and girls out of these criminal-making places and make good citizens of them. Economically it is practicable.

The modern attitude toward the enslavement of humanity is spiritually unsafe. In spiritual as well as economical matters, prevention is better than cure. There is no greater waste to civilization than the appalling and deplorable waste of misspent manhood and womanhood. Every social, moral, and economic value pales into insignificance when compared to the spiritual aspect of the question. That the spiritual natures of the children of the world are soiled, and in some cases completely thwarted, by the present trend of this materialistic age is beyond question. And being soiled, they are, like the soiled garment, greatly reduced in value. The moral and ethical delinquency of one child does not and cannot contribute to the spiritual development of another. When we have moral and ethical delinquency in our child-life, we may expect to find a corresponding delinquency in our civic life; and civic delinquency weakens the chain of spirituality in the community. When one child out of every three will tell a lie on the slightest pretense, and the same proportion will steal without a reasonable provocation, there is something wrong with our views of life and our methods of training. There is just cause for alarm. This materialistic age has made the child and the parent its subjects. Under the dominion of our unjust and wholly impracticable customs, spirituality has been reduced to a minimum. And what is worse, the present trend of things witnesses no resentment, nor do men hear a clarion call to reform the present status of society.

We are profuse in our criticism of the ancients for their blind stupidity and their unwillingness to modify their methods of dealing with women and children. But we allow the spirit of human slavery to thrive in our nation. Are we willing to permit these conditions to continue, culminating in a psychological disaster, economic waste, and spiritual impoverishment? The big task of the Church is to effect a change in our social organism, so that we shall see the fruits of a well-ordered life, culminating in equality and human freedom.

Our French War Debts.

France has been reluctant to pay her debt of some three and one-half billion dollars to the United States. Secretary of the Treasury Mellon feels confident that a French commission will be over to arrange with this country for the settlement of the war debt in the next few months. It seems that Premier Herriot will hold to the policy of former Premier Poincaire in this matter. The German reparations also bear vitally on the matter. According to French figures, the German reparations have been cut 66 per cent, and the French will probably ask a similar reduction in the funding of their debt.

A FEW GOOD BOOKS.

"THE LIFE OF JAMES O'KELLY"
By W. E. MacClenny.

The author traces the life of James O'Kelly through many years of exciting labors. Beginning with his ancestors as far back as 960 A. D., the author gives many points to excite the interest of the reader. He gives specimens of many of O'Kelly's writings. Price, $1.50; pp. 253. Order through The Christian Sun.

"THE MINISTER"
(A series of five addresses)
By Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D.

It treats of the minister in his study, personal life, pulpit, parish and community. This is a good book for the layman as well as the minister. Price, 50c; pp. 78. Order through The Christian Sun.

"LIVES OF CHRISTIAN MINISTERS"
(Over 200 memoirs)
By P. J. Kernodle.

While it is a book of memoirs, it is more—it shows the progress of the Church and its ministers. The design in compiling was to get together material for a history of the Church. Price, $2.00; pp. 408. Order through The Christian Sun.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION MEETS.

The Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met with Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Va., December 9th, with Rev. J. H. Lightbourne presiding and Rev. H. E. Rountree secretary pro tem. Devotional services were conducted by Rev. V. T. Crawford. The pastor, Rev. B. F. Black, welcomed the association, and Rev. H. E. Rountree responded. The roll of the Churches was called and the response was $2,060.00, which was $610.00 more than was paid in at the 1923 session. There were about one hundred in attendance. Seventy-two new members were added.

The afternoon devotionals were conducted by Rev. F. C. Lester. An address, "An Inquiry Into Paul's Missionary Plans," was delivered by Rev. John G. Truitt. Colonel J. E. West spoke on "Men and Millions."

The usual appropriations were made, that to Newport News being increased. Oakland, Nansemond County, was chosen for holding the next session. Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows: J. H. Lightbourne, president; H. S. Hardcastle, vice-president; C. H. West, mission secretary; N. G. Newman, recording secretary, and B. D. Jones, treasurer.

The pastor and good people of Rosemont graciously received the association and furnished a dinner excellent in quality and abundant in quantity. It was a great and inspiring session.

N. G. NEWMAN,
Recording Secretary.

"THE NEXT STEP."

DEAR DR. ATKINSON:

I have just read, with pleasure, your most important and timely editorial in THE SUN of December 4th, on "The Next Step—The Every-Member Canvass." This is one of the most important matters now before our Christian Church folks. I am glad that the Conferences of our Southern Convention are taking up the matter of Christian stewardship by choosing a Conference stewardship secretary or committee in each Conference, by deciding to conduct a real stewardship program in each Church some time during the year, and by putting on an annual every-member canvass. The Churches that have never used this plan, and done it in a right way, cannot realize what a blessing it will be to them. It will bring some of the greatest spiritual and financial blessings that can come to a Church if faithfully carried out. It will be a blessing to men, women and children. It is a Scriptural plan, and God honors His own plan.

It is the official plan recommended by our Christian Church. It applies business sense to the work of the kingdom. It has been thoroughly tested by all Churches. No Church is known which has faithfully followed the well-approved plans of the every-member canvass that has not increased its contributions, simplified its financial problems, and come to rejoice in its larger work, and developed its spirituality. It is just as good for one Church as another as to size and situation. It dignifies the Church cause. It emphasizes the chief business of the Church. It provides weekly support for the benevolences and local current expenses. It is used by progressive Churches in all denominations. It always brings increased contributions and more contributors. It greatly helps the work of the pastor. It greatly strengthens the Church. The canvassers have a fine time. Many spiritual forces will be set in motion. The two budgets should be carefully prepared by the pastor and finance committee working together. They should not be prepared by either alone. Plenty of time should be given to the preparation of the canvass. At least six weeks should be allowed to plan for it.

So important is the every-member canvass, and so important is it that the best results should be secured in every way, that my department has prepared a manual that any Church may easily follow. I shall be glad to furnish one or two copies to any of our Churches free.

WARREN H. DENISON,
Secy. Bureau of Christian Stewardship.

STATESMAN AND CHRISTIAN.

China, with her present-day problems set against the background of her ancient civilization and her age-old philosophy, is the subject of one of a series of articles which P. Whitwell Wilson, British pournalist and author, well-known in America, is writing for Association Men on the work of the Y. M. C. A. in foreign lands. The present article, in the January number of the Y. M. C. A. publication, takes the form of an interview with Dr. Z. T. Yui, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in China, who discusses the political situation, the problem of illiteracy, and the progress of Christianity in his country.

Dr. Yui is "100 per cent Chinese." Educated at St. John's University, a mission college at Shanghai, and with an M. A. degree from Harvard, he has not become Europeanized or Americanized. "No man living has been animated by a more genuine patriotism than he," according to Mr. Wilson. "He is a statesman as well as a Christian. He belongs to that class of literate or learned men who have been, for thousands of years, the real rulers of China. But in his case the limits of Chinese erudition have broken down and his outlook is as wide as the world."

Christianity is being tried in China. "The Chinese are a practical people," says Dr. Yui, "and what they ask about a religion is: "Does it work?" Christianity has indeed come to us—but how? To begin with, there are 130 missions, all separate and all trying to convert the Chinese. Why is that? Then we look at your wares and we ask, "Is that Christianity?" Christian nations come to Peking and interfere with our government—and again we ask: why?" Mr. Wilson adds:

"China, at various periods of her existence, has shown how intensely she cares about religion. She has built innumerable temples to Buddha, and, in a fury of disillusionment, has swept them away again. In her long annals, the coming of the Christians is as yet no more than an incident. She must test Christianity. She must make it her own."

To the basic principles of the Christian ideal, China is hospitable, as is shown by her welcome of the Y. M. C. A., which now has 80,000 members. "China is impressed by the fact that in a Y. M. C. A. an attempt is made to educate and to train the whole man—his body, and his mind, and his spiritual faculties. The Chinese philosophy is full of this idea—seeing life whole. The Chinese thus appreciate an all-round application of the Christian faith."

The Y. M. C. A. in China has many institutions which meet the needs of soldiers, sailors, special industries, foreigners in China, and of students. It is to this latter class, according to Mr. Wilson, that the association devotes most of its attention, because in it are to be found the probable future leaders of the republic.

Regarding politics, both Dr. Yui and the Chinese Y maintain, in Mr. Wilson's phrase, "what President Wilson called 'the neutral mind.' " The Y. M. C. A. has, therefore, become an "ameliorating and unifying influence, and there are no leaders or authorities who refuse contact with it. The aim of the Y. M. C. A. in China is to set forth the ideals of Christ."

Dr. Yui believes one of the greatest necessities of his country is education, but he is in favor of an education that will preserve the traditions of the country.

"The Chinese characters," says Mr. Wilson, "are to Dr. Yui the symbols of Chinese culture. And, as a Christian, he values that culture. He believes that in the books of China there lies concealed a storehouse of wisdom which the Western world needs. To him Christianity does not involve the surrender of these stores of profound sagacity. On the contrary, it is in Christ the he would have them conserved."

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AHEAD.

A friend, a minister, in conversing with a layman about the Christian Church, said his Church (the Methodist) was now exactly what James O'Kelly asked for; and so your Church (the Christian) can and should come back home—that is, it should now unite with the Methodist Church. But this layman told the good minister, "No, the Christian Church could not do that."

The minister asked, "Why?" Says this layman: "The Christian Church has had a hundred years' growth ahead of that time; that while the Methodist Church has taken one hundred years to get where the Christian Church started, the Christian Church has advanced one hundred years." The good Methodist minister courteously yielded the point.

Other denominations as well as the Methodist have grown in liberality and vision, but they are all on a level, and while all have made advancement toward the principles of the Christian Church, still the Christian Church is far in the lead. The principles of the Christian Church are too deep, too broad, too high, for organic union—the Christian Church is that to which others are approaching. The unity of the Church as preached by the Christians is right; it is the goal for all others—we cannot leave it to go to others, but others can come up to it. It is proper to invite others to come up higher; but for the Christian Church to propose to join with a denomination, large or small, is to propose to take a step backward. For the Christian Church to step down to the level of the denominational platform to unite with another denomination would be to turn the hands of time backward one hundred years.

Some of our leaders say, "If we can't unite with other denominations, then we should stop preaching unity and union." The preachers who thus think or talk have not yet gotten a vision of what the Christian Church means and stands for. They have a misconception of the tenets of the Christian Church to bring about that for which the Master prayed "that all may be one." They fail to propagate the principles of the Christian Church. They are down in the valley. They have never had a glimpse of the glory of the Christian Church. They have never ascended to the mountain heights, nor been permitted to look the landscape over.

The business of the Christian Church is to draw other Churches or denominations up from their present level to higher ground. Some preachers, in the effort, give up; they confess they are not equal to the occasion. I have in mind a large, handsome Church which could not now be duplicated for $100,000. This Church is located in a Western city. Four successive pastors, strong apparently, who had gained wide reputation as big preachers, because they could not hold down the job, or rather sustain the high-born principles they had thought to espouse, in turn, leaped from the high pinnacle to the denominational plains below. Instead of pressing onward and upward, they seek the path of least resistance—it is easier to travel down-grade than to climb the ladder of fame. K.

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

A good word may be safely said for the children of the First Christian Church of Norfolk. Their response to the Church's effort to train them is inspiring. Fourteen classes of them file into every corner and crevice of our Church every Sunday morning (this does not include the five classes for adults). A junior choir of twenty voices assist greatly in the beautiful worship service conducted in the auditorium of the Church for the upper classes every Sunday morning, while the beginners and primaries are having their special programs in other parts of the building.

At 11 o'clock, an average of more than thirty of our children attend junior Church and remain throughout the entire morning Church program. For the children, special pews are reserved. Just after the general opening of the regular morning worship, which consists of a call to worship, response by the congregation, doxology, invocation, and the "Gloria Patri," the junior Church program is executed. With some innovation, their service is a short sermon, a prayer either by one of their own number or any one else, and their especially prepared song led by the junior choir. Their presence is an added attraction to the regular hour of worship, for every one of them place a duplex envelope in the offering plate, and on Communion days nearly all of them partake of the Lord's Supper.

At 2 o'clock they report about forty strong for Junior Christian Endeavor.. Here their enthusiasm is in full flower, which is evidenced by the fact that they have repeatedly returned from the quarterly meetings of the Portsmouth-Norfolk Interdenominational Junior Christian Endeavor rallies with the banner. But many of them, especially the boys, return for the evening Church service. Besides all this, they maintain a fine Willing Workers' Missionary Society, a regular and well-attended choir practice, and for them a daily vacation Bible school is conducted annually.

In them, our Church most frequently feels the thrill of successful achievement. For instance, five persons joined our Church Sunday and three of them were from their number. A soul-stirring quietness filled the Church as they so innocently and confidently affirmed their belief in Jesus as the Saviour of the world, as their personal Saviour, and their purpose to live a godly life. The children of the First Christian Church are servants of the King! JOHN G. TRUITT,
Pastor.

DANVILLE.

We moved into our new home November 20th. The people have been very clever and kind to us. When we arrived on the ground, Mrs. P. H. Harper met us immediately and escorted us to her home, where she served a good dinner. At night we were invited to eat supper at Mrs. Ruben Rickets. We enjoyed their hospitality greatly and gratefully. To these kind ladies we are very grateful.

As we were busy unpacking and arranging our furniture, we discovered packages in the pantry, and upon investigation learned it was other things to eat. This was a pleasant surprise. Among the things found were sugar, tea, canned corn, tomatoes, peaches, berries, cherries, preserves, Irish and sweet potatoes, salmon, Postum, salt and pickle. Many thanks to all who had a part.

There was a good congregation at the first Church service. In getting acquainted, we discovered that Bro. Klapp is held in very high esteem and appreciation of his devotion and service as pastor. We feel quite incapable of following our brother in the ministry, for he is well versed in the Bible and very deeply consecrated to the Lord's work. Therefore, we ask an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood that we may be able to serve our Lord acceptably in this part of His vineyard. L. L. WYRICK.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH.

A two-weeks' series of revival services came to a close with the evening service Sunday, December 7th. That day will long be remembered by the members and friends of the Elm Avenue Christian Church as a day of great blessing and rejoicing. At the close of the Sunday morning service, nine persons came forward and united with the Church. There were five adults and one boy who joined from one home at that service. At the evening service fourteen others united with the Church. Thirty-three were added to the Church in all, and it is expected that others will join in the near future.

Most of the persons uniting with the Church were adults, several being of middle age. It was indeed a glorious sight when, upon the invitation of the pastor,, who conducted the services, the large class of new members took their places on the platform before the large audience present at the service.

We are praying that the Lord will continue to bless the word at the Elm Avenue Church, and that the forward movement in the Church and Sunday School may continue until this Church shall become a great power for God in the community. V. T. CRAWFORD, Pastor.

HOLY NECK.

The Holy Neck people, true to their reputation for good works, turned Santa Claus and came to the parsonage on the 13th instant in full force, took charge of the kitchen, and deposited a large and generous supply of good things for the pantry, with a Christmas turkey thrown in for good measure.

Mrs. Newman and myself are deeply and sincerely grateful for this kindly expression of good will, and wish for each and every one the richest blessings in the future.

"Golden Rule Sunday" was observed by Holy Neck the 14th, and an offering of $25.50 for the Near East Relief was made. The givers came, one by one, and laid their gifts upon the altar, while the congregation sang, "I am Coming to the Cross" and "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone?" N. G. NEWMAN,

MONDAY.

THE BELIEVER'S DUTY.

"Whosoever shall confess me before men."—Luke 12:8-9.

Thousands of Churches are holding special evangelistic meetings. Many will stand at the cross-roads; some will make the good step; others will cast away what may be a last opportunity. Said an irresolute man to the evangelist at such a meeting: "I dread the public confession; I am timid in public; I cannot face the ordeal!"

By way of admonition to such, let us consider an evangelistic meeting held in the year 64 A. D., as revealed by the records. This meeting of more than eighteen hundred years ago was held on the outskirts of ancient Rome. Nero reigned. Christians were under persecution; many had been burned at the stake, others thrown to the lions, some crucified. So this meeting was held in a grove and at night, with only the light of a fitful moon.

In the background stood a young Roman. He heard and believed. Always he had been perplexed by the multiplicity of pagan gods. This preaching about Christ was reasonable. The Spirit whispered to his heart. But the enemy!

On the next night, however, he faced the group of believers and the shadows, and made his confession of Christ. That was the year 64—a period marked by a carnival of death. What shall be said in defense of one who, in this peaceful era, lacks courage to publicly proclaim Jesus?

TUESDAY.

THE PATH FROM THE TEMPLE.

"When they were come out of the synagogue, they entered into the house."—Mark 1:28-31.

Those who look upon this picture can see the people as they go up to the synagogue. Peter goes from the home of a sick mother. Poor and rich, the sad and the happy came up to the temple of God that day. What people have not been able to see so clearly is the path from the temple. We have looked on the place where we met God as the shrine to which we came, bringing our sorrows and our troubles, and receiving comfort and peace and calm of heart; but there is a path which leads out from the temple, on the other side, down into the house where daily life is lived; where people are sick, where problems are to be solved and hard work to be done.

The miracle that happens in the temple we all expect. We feel sure that there God will meet us, and that the whole place will be full of His glory; but it is the miracle in the house that we may have forgotten to look for, and that miracle life needs.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

FOOLS AND THEIR FOLLY.

"The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God."—Prov. 14:9.

Here we have three different kinds of fools! Let us look at each in turn. "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." It is very suggestive here to notice the meaning of the Hebrew original of the word "fool." It means "the empty man," and the full force of the text is seen when it is read, "The empty man hath said in his heart, There is no God."

The second kind of fool is the man who mocks at sin. Such men will not recognize a difference between right and wrong, but call good evil and evil good. The word "fool" here means "the corrupt."

The third kind of fool is in a different category. Here we have "God's fool," the man who is willing to be counted a fool in the world's sight for the sake of Christ. The word here means "a rebel," so the meaning conveyed is that the follower of our Lord is willing to be outlawed from the world, refusing to share its spirit and walk in its ways.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

THURSDAY.

THE OMNIPOTENT PRESENCE.

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."—Gen. 1:1-4.

This is the sublimest sentence in human speech, and the most comprehensive. What unnumbered ages it covers! What processes it implies—whirling vortices of atoms, measureless nebulae, stars and suns in motion toward an appointed end! But the great fact is, it implies more than processes. It affirms a presence that is never withdrawn. God is still creating.

A man in a laboratory cut his finger. He used flexible collodion to cover the abrasion. The film of collodion came off. He looked at it and saw lines made by his fingerprint. He had unintentionally made a record of himself. He made other records, and found that a noise disturbs an electric needle and the needle writes its record on wax. In little lines is the potency of sound. This thought occurred to one experimenter: if there is anywhere in the universe a sensitive omniscient mind, it receives every impression. Our words are written on it. Our thoughts are engraved there, even our faintest imaginings. Well, such a mind is God. So believed the psalmist, "Thou knowest me altogether."

Prayer.—By one of the parents, asking that the Divine Creator who made all things may rule our hearts and lives to serve Him.

FRIDAY.

THE LIFE FURTHER ON.

"I am he that liveth, and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore."—Rev. 1:17-19.

The hand of Thorwaldsen lost its cunning when he had once made a masterpiece that satisfied him. If life were finished here, what an insignificant thing it would be! Time is only the infinitesimal arc of an infinite circle.

Once there lived One who did His best, who used every atom of His energy for the highest ends; and dying in shame and anguish, He cried with a loud voice. "It is finished!" What did He mean? That His life was ended? No; for He sits in heaven, "expecting, until His enemies shall be made His foolstool." That His projected temple of truth and righteousness was complete! Nay, only that its foundations were now laid and cemented with His blood.

Nothing was ended but the beginning.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SATURDAY.

THE BENEFICENT MINISTRY OF SORROW.

"For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me."—Psa. 32:1-6.

When Naomi returned from Moab to the fatherland and old acquaintance peered into her grief-furrowed face and asked, "Is this not Naomi?" there is a terrible bitterness in her reply: "Call me not Naomi, but Mara; for the Almighty hath dealt bitterly with me." She had emptied her cup of bitterness without tasting the sweet nectar of God. This was the greatest tragedy of her tragic life.

This singer in Israel had learned that the heavy hand of God may be weighty with benediction. We have in the psalm a burst of rapture from a heart that has tasted the sweets of forgiveness. We have the chart of the mountain path from the depths to the summit. It was the heavy hand of the Guide that had led him to glowing heights. The heavy hand in this instance seems to have been physical suffering, the sense and shame of sin, and the thirst of a droughty soul.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE SOUL THAT GIVES.

"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."—Mark 8:35.

The penalty for selfish living is a shriveled life. The soul that insists upon getting everything and giving nothing is on the steep downgrade to spiritual suicide. The end of a selfish life is spiritual death. If a man will not let the inflow of his life pass to service in an outflow, he will become like a pool with no outlet, stagnant and foul.

The strong man who does not use his strength becomes a weakling. The scholar who does not use his knowledge becomes mentally inefficient. The rich man who does not use his money for worthy service becomes a greedy miser. This law of life should be inscribed everywhere: Lose your life and your substance in some noble cause, or you take the risk of losing it forever!

While other women of her age were losing their better selves in the luxuries of society, Florence Nightingale went out to the Crimea and spent her life in service among soldiers, and as she lost herself there, she found herself in a richer, diviner character. Livingstone lost his life in the heart of Africa for Christ's sake and the gospel's, but he saved it to a glorious immortality.

The essence of Christianity is nothing else but the living of our lives according to the sacrificial example of Him who told us to lose ourselves in order to find ourselves. If we so live, we shall not only save our own souls, but the souls of every one we know. Indeed, it is thus that the world shall be saved:

"For the soul that gives is the soul that lives,
And, bearing another's load,
Doth lighten our own, and shorten the way,
And brighten the homeward road."

Columbus was seventy days coming to America in a ship weighing 100 tons and carrying a crew of fifty-two. Dr. Hugo Eckener, in eighty hours, came to America in an airship weighing ninety tons and capable of carrying a crew of eighty-three.

Ancient Egyptians had incubators for hatching chickens. The eggs were placed in temperate ovens and turned much as are those hatched in the modern incubator.

It has been discovered by an archeologist that gloves were worn by both the ancient Egyptians and the ancient Hebrews.

There are 30,000 different kinds of fishes in the Amazon Rivers, among them many species found nowhere else.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I am wondering what old Santa will do for us. We always feel very anxious for the children's Christmas. Of course, all of them, from the largest to the smallest, expect old Santa to come. That is perfectly natural. The writer well remembers how anxious he was when he was a little boy for Santa to come, and how much happiness it was to find our stockings full of candy, nuts, etc. The writer still enjoys old Santa's visits, and really we feel a little disappointed if he does not come. We hope some of our Churches will send us candy, oranges, apples and other things, so all of our children may be remembered.

If a Church, Sunday School, or society of any kind wants to give a present to each child, it will be mighty nice to wrap the present and put the child's name on it. We will be glad to furnish you with a list of names.

Our Thanksgiving offering is coming in nicely, and this week's report carries us above three thousand dollars; but that is a long way from ten thousand. Our grand total for the year is a little more than $20,000; that leaves us $7,000 to raise during the rest of this month to reach our goal for the year. Will we reach either goal? It is left for you to decide.

The following have been sent in since our last report: E. M. Holt Plaid Mills, Burlington, N. C., 150 yds. gingham; Sidney Cotton Mills, 169 yds. cloth; Pomona Mills, Inc., Pamona, N. C., 151 yds. cloth; Ladies' Aid Society, Pleasant Grove Church, Va., 32 1-2 gals. fruit and preserves; New Hope Missionary Society, 1 box of clothing; Glenco Mills, 234 yds. outing; Lakeside mills, 96 yds. goods.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By H. S. Hardcastle.

MISS PATTIE COGHILL, Field Secretary, 11 East Newton St., Boston, Mass.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Topic: "Central Period of Christ's Ministry." —Mark 6:7-16.

Golden Text: "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father."—John 14:9.

Home Readings: Mon., Dec. 22, The choice of the twelve—Matt. 10:1-8. Tues., The feeding of the five thousand—John 6:1-15. Wed., Peter's confession—Matt. 16:13-20. Thurs., The first Christmas—Luke 2:18-20. Fri., The transfiguration—Luke 9:28-36. Sat., The raising of Lazarus—John 11:31-44. Sun., The judgment day—Matt. 25:31-46.

From the choosing of the twelve, on to the close of this quarter, there is gradual unfolding and leading up to the acknowledgment by His disciples of Christ's divinity. To the questions, "Who do men say I am?" and "Who say you I am?" Further acknowledgment was made by Martha at the resurrection of Lazarus.

Perhaps no period in the history of Christ's ministry is more interesting than the one covered by the past quarter. This period covers the major portion of Jesus' Galilean ministry and a part of His ministry in Perea. The lessons glimpse in outline Jesus' activities at a time when interest was high and opposition strong. Many of His mighty works and sublime utterances occurred during this period. It is plain from His teachings that Jesus saw the gathering storm and sought to prepare His disciples for it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

By Wm. T. Scott.

Topic: "The Old Year and the New."

Scripture Reading: Ps. 37:1-5; Phil. 3:12-14.

Memory Verse: "Old things have passed away; behold! they have become new."

Daily Readings: M., Dec. 22—Jas. 4:14, Fleeting years. T., Dec. 23—Jas. 3:1-6, Old-year mistakes. W., Dec. 24—Zech. 2:5; Luke 21:18, 19, Old-year protection. T., Dec. 25—Psa. 31:1-5, 23, 24, New-year faith. F., Dec. 26—Psa. 23:1-5, New-year guidance. S., Dec. 27—2 Cor. 12:1-15, New-year service. F., Dec. 28—Psa. 23:1-5, New-year guidóshrdle Dec. 28—Psa. 23:1-5, The old year and the new.

Teaching: To profit by experience and to press on toward perfection.

Object of Meeting: To review 1924 and to preview 1925. To profit by our mistakes and to pray for forgiveness for our sins and to make 1925 the best year of our lives in service to God and our fellows.

Many people take the passing of the old year and the coming of the new year as a time for "turning over a new leaf." This is fine, and it suggests new opportunities; but too many people "turn over a new leaf simply because the old one is full." Let us, as Christian Endeavorers, take this occasion for a look back over the past and really hope for a vision of the future. There is so much to be done. The society has a wonderful opportunity to carry the glad message of life to those who are in sin. Let our societies really practice efforts of evangelism. There are many who have no hope, there are those who are eagerly wishing for a chance to begin again. There are thousands who are saying:

"I wish that there were some wonderful place
Called the Lang of Beginning again,
Where all our mistakes and all our heartaches,
And all of our poor, selfish grief
Could be dropped, like a shabby old coat, at the door,
And never be put on again."

They may never be able to wish for it or tell you their wishes in the language of a poet, but their wish is coming to you on every hand. Let us Endeavorers be true to our Master, telling those who know Him not that "if any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature. Old things pass away, behold all things become new. Let us really make the new year a time when many shall start the right way.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR.

In just a few words I want to tell about our Junior Christian Endeavor Society. One year ago last August we organized our society with nine members. We have now on roll sixty-seven. We also have seventeen honorary members. Last Sunday night we had sixty-four present.

I am so glad to see the interest that each child is taking; and also the honorary members are very much interested. Our desire is that we may keep them interested in the work, and that we may teach them in the right way, because we realize that our future Church depends on the juniors of today. The Lord is blessing us by giving us new members every service. Our goal for next year is one hundred juniors and twenty-five honorary members. Please help us pray that we may reach it.

Lettie Scott,
Greensboro, N. C. Junior Supt.

ALLOWED TO SURRENDER.

"Why should I have to surrender?" is the question that springs to the lips of many who are asked to yield their lives wholly to the Lord. The question is a mistaken one. They do not have to surrender. But perhaps they can learn a lesson from a young Japanese wife. Higuchi San, the Japanese pastor of a small Methodist Church in Kyoto, has blessedly held up the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour, and in the first two years of his ministry there the membership more than doubled. He asked James Cuthbertson, of the Japan evangelistic band, to lead meetings in his Church. Many came; and one day, while the evangelist was speaking on "Full Surrender," a young Japanese married woman received Christ as her Saviour. After the address was finished, she came up to the speaker to thank him for his share in the great blessing that had come to her. And she said: "I'm crying, but these are tears of joy that God has allowed me to present my body to Him." She was overwhelmed by the unspeakable privilege that God had actually given her; that, after Christ had presented His own body as her substitute sin-bearer, and had died for her sins, now she, having received Him as Saviour, was actually permitted to present her body a living sacrifice, holy (by the blood of Jesus), acceptable unto God, which is (her) your reasonable service." No, she did not have to surrender, but she was allowed to do so. When we see as clearly as this young Japanese wife, we shall praise God with her, for time and eternity, that we were allowed to surrender—S. S. Times.

THE BETTER WAY.

A young woman who had met with a serious accident found that she would be a cripple for life, and compelled to spend a great part of her time in bed or in her chair. Upon hearing the doctor's verdict, she bravely wrote to a friend: "Do you know I am becoming quite expert with the needle, making little garments for orphan children? At first I thought I would just make the best of my misfortune, but now I am planning how to make the most of it."

There is a distinction here deserving of careful consideration. Often we say we are making the best of misfortune when we really mean we are just trying to live with it perhaps, from day to day, to smile and bear up grimly. Making the most of misfortune implies something more than this. It means that we will make that misfortune itself so turn our thoughts and energies into new directions that our whole life shall take on new character and purpose. We never really make the best of misfortune until we make the most of it.—Selected.

MOTION-PICTURE CONFERENCE.

Shall motion pictures be regulated by law? This question and related ones will be discussed at the Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C., January 14th to 16th, when representatives of twenty-five religious organizations will gather for free discussion of all motion-picture problems. Delegates will be self-appointed. The conference is open to any reader of this paper. Copies of the full program may be obtained from Dr. Chas. Scanlon, Columbia Bank Building, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Among the speakers on the program are Dr. Henry A. Atkinson, Raymond Fosdick, Dr. Geo. W. Wright, of the Philippines; Miss Minnie E. Kennedy, Dr. Thos. E. Finegan, Mrs. Chas. E. Merriam, Miss Maude M. Aldrich, Dr. S. Z. Batten, and Dr. Clarence True Wilson.

IN THE WEATHER FACTORY.

By Nancy Byrd Turner.

Just as soon as summer's done,
Such a flit and flutter!
In the weather factory
Such a clip-and-clutter!
Nuts are begging, "Send us frost!"
In a month or so
Children will be saying, "Ah,
If 'twould only snow!"

So the little weather folk
Dash around and scurry;
Everybody with a job,
Working in a flurry.
"Winkle, Twinkle, mix the frost;
Hoppy, grind the hail;
Make icicles, Nip and Tuck—
Thousands, without fail!

Tippy, start the flake machine
Quickly, and remember—
Twenty million tons of snow
Needed by November.
Whipper, Snapper, hurry up!"
Soon as autumn's come,
In the weather factory
Things begin to hum.

The Christian Sun would make an excellent present for a Christmas gift. Fifty-two times a year would your friend be reminded of you.

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

Dear me, Kiddies, I have just heard the most exciting story! It's not a very happy story all the way through, though, for, dear me! oh! oh! oh! the name of it is "The Grouch Family." You know what it means to be grouchy, now don't you? That's when you had pie for supper and you passed your plate for a second piece—and then all night long you saw things standing in a row and looking at you cross-eyed. Oh, my! then next day—whew! you had a grouch all day, 'cause you felt so bad—and the pie was the cause of it, every tiny, weeny-wee bit. Now, isn't that so? Well, this Grouch Family were so cross all the year long! they quarreled and frowned, and even Sunny, the wee baby girl, cried and cried till Mother Grouch was most distracted, and Father Grouch wouldn't give a single cent towards feeding the poor and needy at Christmas time—and, gee whiz! Big Sister wasn't a really, truly big sister at all. She quarreled at the maid 'cause she forgot to dust the parlor, and she wouldn't tell Baby Sunny a story to keep her from crying; and she made Bobby Boy leave the room 'cause he bounced a ball. Oh, terrible! terrible! wasn't it, dear Sunshine Kiddies?

Then one day, just before Christmas, in walked a Fairy Sprite. She came in on a Sunbeam and hid in the corner—and, gee! while she was there she wouldn't let a single Grouch frown a single bit! No, sir-ee! And, listen, she stayed a whole week. Then when she had gone, the whole family were feeling so much better that they decided to act better, and just 'tend like the Sunshine Sprite was there all the time. And what do you s'pose? They even changed their name, too, and now it is the Happy Family—and Mother is happy, and Bobby Boy tried to be thoughtful and bounce the pretty red-and-blue ball outdoors; and Big Sister was kind to Mother and wee Baby Sunny, which made Mother happy and Baby Sunny stop crying. And listen to this. Father—yes, he did, really—gave a whole family of poor people a huge, big box full of apples and nuts and warm clothes, and toys; and, oh dear, I couldn't name all the things he did buy.

Then Santy came the night 'fore Christmas, and he was so happy to fill all the Happy Family's stockings—oh, he was indeed!

Hey, Kiddies! open the window and let in a little Sunshine Sprite—just before Christmas any way; it will make you happy, and make some one else happy, too.

Oh-eee! I am glad that you are all in the Happy family. Not a one of the Kiddie Korner Kiddies are in the Grouch Family. How do I know? Oh, I know a lot and a lot of things about Kiddies. I'll tell you some day how I found out.

Happy days are coming soon. I'll want to hear all about them in some little New Year's letters that you write to me yourselves.

Good-by, little Fairy Sprites. Are you not the Fairy Sprites at your house?

Lovingly, your editor.

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

There came a little Child to earth
  Long ago,
And the angels of God proclaimed His birth,
  High and low.
Out in the night, so calm and still,
  Their song was heard,
For they knew that the Child on Bethlehem's hill
  Was Christ the Lord.

—Emily E. S. Elliott.

HE KNOCKED THE TIGER FLAT.

Little Tom and his father were calling on a big-game hunter, and Tom had been put on the floor to play with a tiger-skin rug. He interrupted his elders' conversation with so many questions that finally the hunter took him on his lap and told about the tiger hunt. Tom returned to the rug, examined it with renewed interest, and then inquired: "How did you shoot it so flat?"

BESSIE'S CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

Willie Cook's mother was very poor. She was a widow, and Willie's sister, Bessie, was sick, so they did not expect a merry Christmas at their house. Christmas morning Willie's mother gave him some money and told him to get some meat for a soup at the corner store, and they must be thankful for a dinner of any kind, money was so scarce.

Bessie was to sit up for the first time, and that made them very happy. Still, Willie did want to get a present for her, but he had been obliged to take care of her while her mother was working and had not been able to earn any money. Willie bought the meat and was on his way home when he heard a very faint me-ow and a very loud bow-wow, and he saw on a fence a tiny black kitten. The little creature looked half starved, and the dog had frightened her terribly. "Go away," said Willie to the dog. Then he took the kitten from the fence and put her inside his coat.

"I'll take her home to Bessie," he said, and then his face brightened. "I'll fix her up with a ribbon and tell sister it is a Christmas present." He hurried home and told his mother his plan.

"We must feed her first," she said. "She looks starved, poor little thing." They gave the kitten some warm milk, and after she drank two saucerfuls she seemed to grow plump. "We will keep her in the kitchen until Bessie is in the sitting-room," said Willie's mother, and then I will find a red ribbon and you can tie it around the kitten's neck and let her run in where sister is."

Bessie was so glad to sit up that she was quite happy without a present, but when the little black kitten ran into the room with a card tied on her neck by a red ribbon, Bessie was delighted. The kitten ran to her and climbed into her lap, and on the card Bessie read in printed letters, "Merry Christmas—from Brother."

"Oh, you dear little thing," Bessie said; and then Willie and his mother came in and Bessie told them that she would rather have a kitten for a Christmas present than anything.

But Santa did not forget them, for some kind man saw, in the opportunity column of a paper, that there was a chance to make some one happy, and while Willie played with the kitten there came a knock at the door, and when it was opened there was a basket with a turkey and all sorts of good things for a Christmas dinner. And there was a book for Bessie, a game for Willie, and a pair of warm mittens for their mother, and they had the merriest of Christmas days. Willie began the day right. He was kind to the poor, starved kitten, and the whole day was bright and happy for him.

SANTA CLAUS' NARROW ESCAPE.

Thomas and William were about seven years old. They were twins, and no one could think of more mischief than they could. The day before Christmas, William said: "I hope Santa Claus brings that gun this year. I wrote him a letter asking for it, and a knife with two blades, and he didn't pay any attention to the letter."

"He did not bring my pistol or sword, either," said Thomas. "Perhaps he thinks we are too young."

"He is not supposed to bother about that," said William; "he ought to just take care of the asking part."

"I wish we could see him," said Thomas. "If we asked him instead of writing to him, he might give them to us."

"But how can we see him?" asked William; "he comes in late at night so softly you cannot hear him, and mother never would let us sit up and wait."

"We could set a trap and catch him," suggested Thomas. "There is the bear-trap."

"Oh, that would hurt him," replied William; "I should not like to do that, for he has been very good to us, even if he did not leave the things we asked for last year. I'll tell you," he continued; "we can leave the cellar window open. He very likely will be glad to get in so easily."

"What good will that do?" asked Thomas; "we will be asleep."

"Come on in the cellar and I will show you," said William.

All the afternoon they worked, and when night came they had completed the trap to catch Santa Claus. The window was left open, and in front of it was a long board. One end rested on the window-sill, with the other on the cellar floor. This they covered well with soap, and at the end of the board was a stick to which was fastened a piece of strong twine, which would close the window when Santa slid down the board and hit the stick.

"I guess he'll be some surprised when he slides down that board," said Thomas.

"He'll be very angry when he finds he cannot get out," said William; "but that will keep him there until we run downstairs and ask him for my gun and knife and your pistol and sword."

"Do you suppose we can keep awake until he comes?" asked Thomas. "You know, they say he does not get around sometimes until 'most mornin'."

"Of course we can," replied William.

They sat up as long as their mother would let them, and then hung up their stockings and went to bed. It was hard work keeping awake, but at last they heard their father and mother go to bed and the house was quiet. Then they listened, and after a long time they heard some one walking around in the yard.

"There he is," said William; "let's go to the top of the stairs and wait."

Just as they reached the stairs they heard a terrible noise, and the window closed with a bang. Their father heard it also, and ran to the stairs, but the boys were at the cellar door.

"You go back," called Thomas to his father; "we have caught Santa Claus, and we want to see him alone. Hold on, Santa," they called, opening the cellar door and turning on the light, "we'll be down and let you out again."

But instead of Santa Claus, there was just an ordinary man lying on the cellar floor groaning.

"Who are you?" called Thomas. "You are not Santa Claus, I know."

His father pulled both boys away from the door and closed it. Then he telephoned the police, and in a short time the officers came and went into the cellar. They found that the burglar had broken his leg, and that was the reason he had not escaped.

"We soaped the board, so it would be easy for him to slide down to the bottom," said William. "I bet Santa would have slid all right"

"You boys go to bed," said their father when the officers had gone; "and if you do not go to sleep you will not get any Christmas presents."

"We had fun, anyway, didn't we?" said William.

"Yes," replied Thomas; "next to catching Santa, I think catching a burglar is best."

LOVE YOUR FARM.

Love your farm. Every farmer should not only love his work as the artist loves his work, but in the same spirit, too, every farmer should love his farm itself as he would love a favorite horse or dog. He should know every rod of the ground, should know just what each acre is best adapted to, should feel a joy and pride in having every hill and valley look its best, and he should be as much ashamed to have a field scarred with gullies as he would be to have a beautiful colt marked with lashes; as much ashamed to have a piece of ground worn out from ill treatment as to have a horse gaunt and bony from neglect; as much hurt by seeing his acres sick from wretched management as he would be to see his cows half-starving from the same cause.

Love your ground—that piece of God's creation which you hold in fee simple. Fatten its poorer parts as carefully as you would an ailing collie. Heal the washed, torn places in the hillsides as you would the barb-scars on your pony. Feed with legumes and soiling crops and fertilizers the barren and gullied patch that needs especial attention; nurse it back to life and beauty and fruitfulness. Make a meadow of the bottom that is inclined to wash; watch it and care for it until the kindly root-masses heal every gaping wound, and in one unbroken surface the "tides of grass break into foam of flowers" upon the outer edges. Don't forget even the forest lands. See that every acre of woodland has enough trees on it to make it profitable—"a good stand" of the timber crop as well as every other crop. Have an eye to the beautiful in laying off the cleared fields—a tree here and there, but no wretched beggar's coat mixture of little patches and little rents; rather broad fields fully tended, and of as nearly uniform fertility as possible, making of your growing crops as it were, a beautiful garment, whole and unbroken, to clothe the fruitful acres God has given you to keep and tend even as He gave the first garden into the keeping of our first parents.

And so again we say—love your farm. Make it a place of beauty, a place of joyous fruitfulness, an example for your neighbors, a heritage for your children! Make improvements on it that will last beyond your day. Make an ample yard about it with all the old-fashioned flowers that your grandmother knew; set a great orchard near it, bearing many manner of fruits; lay off roads and walks leading to it and keep them up; plant hedges along the approaches and flowering bulbs and shrubs—crape myrtles and spires and privet and roses—so that your grandchildren will some day speak of their grandsire, who cared enough for the beautiful and loved the farm well enough to leave for them this abiding glory of tree and shrub flower.

Name the farm, too; treasure up its history; preserve the traditions of all the romance and adventure and humor and pathos that are in any way connected with it; and if some of the young folks must leave it, let them look back to it with happy memories of beauty and worthy ideals and well-ordered industry.

We have not developed in this country, as we should, the intense pride that the Englishman feels in being a landowner. It gives a man a distinction that the homeless man has not. He is a better citizen, a freeholder, a guardian holding in trust a piece of creation direct from the hands of the Almighty. And yet how many—alas! how many—who have such talents in their keeping are indeed unprofitable servants—not so much as keeping their treasure unhurt (as the one-talent man in the Bible did), but wearing out and destroying in one brief lifetime the heritage that the Creator intended to remain fertile and fruitful, to feed and nurture our human race, as long as the earth shall last.

Love your farm. If you cannot be proud of it now, begin today to make it a thing you can be proud of. Much dignity has come to you in that you are owner and caretaker for a part of God's footstool; show yourself worthy of that dignity. Watch earnestly over every acre. Let no day go by that you do not add something of comeliness and potential fertility to its fields. And finally, leave some spot beneath the shade of some giant tree where at last, "like as a shock of corn cometh in his season," you can lay down your weary body, leaving the world a little better for your having lived in it, and earning the approval of the Great Father (who made the care of the fields and gardens the first task given man): "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter into the joy of thy Lord."—Clarence Poe, in Progressive Farmer.

THE MYSTERY OF PRAYER.

It is sometimes urged that prayer is mysterious. So is everything else, if we stop to think about it. Matter is a mystery. Nobody knows what matter is. Force is a mystery. Nobody knows what force is. Gravitation is a mystery. Nobody knows what gravitation is. Nobody knows what takes place when we drop a lump of sugar into a cup of coffee. Whether the change is mechanical or chemical, the very wisest men are not able to say. We know just one thing, that by dropping sugar into the coffee, the coffee is sweetened. For most of us that is enough. We know that by dropping a prayer into a day we sweeten the day. How this is brought about we do not know. Who has sight so keen and strong that it can follow the flight of song or flight of prayer? Why should we not be as reasonable and practical in our religion as we are at the dinner tables?

It costs about $45,000 to build one mile of the best concrete road, twenty-four feet wide.

RIGNEY.

After a few days of suffering, Bro. Rigney passed to receive his reward on November 9th. Bro. Rigney was a charter member of Rocky Ford, and one that it may be well said discharged his duty well as an appointed deacon. He was over seventy years of age, and only became a member of the Church about two years ago. He gave a sweet testimony on his dying bed, in the words "I am nearer heaven than I have ever been before." He not only was a faithful Church member, but also was a loyal and devoted person to his community and government. He was noted for the many offices he had held. On the morning he was taken sick, he was at the district voting-place acting as a judge. His two acts of last service were to assist in making preparation for what he had hoped to call his Church building and in acting at the voting-place in his district.

The funeral services were held at Elk Spur. Hon. Judge Bollen gave a splendid talk on his life as one that had known him as a playmate and a helper in the cause of his country. He spoke highly of his life, and while not a professed follower of God until of late date, yet being one htat carried always with him the spirit of Christ. Following this talk, Sister Morey gave a splendid talk as to his life for the length of time she had known him. M. T. SORRELL.

BOONE.

Sister Julia C. Boone was born 1854; died, November 17, 1924. When a child she united with Hanks' Chapel Christian Church, and remained a consistent member and Christian. She leaves a husband, six children and several relatives and friends to mourn her going.

I am glad I was her pastor for seven years. During this time I spent many pleasant hours in her home. On November 19, 1924, she was laid to rest in Hanks' Chapel Cemetery. The funeral was conducted by the writer, her former pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Barkley, of the Presbyterian Church of Pittsboro, N. C. May the blessings of God abide with them all is my prayer.

Presbyterians Aid Students.—

The Presbyterian Board of Christian Education aided needy students with loans aggregating $110,000. Seven hundred and sixty-eight students thus were aided; of these, 606 were in preparation for the ministry, 100 for Church lay work, and 62 for medical missions. One hundred and seventy more students were aided through the rotary loan fund, which amounted to approximately $22,000.

This way the Church has of lending money to aid students in their educational preparation for Church work is an excellent idea, and the scope of its activities should be broadened. The Church, through gifts, should be enabled to do more to make possible not only a unanimous ministry holding college degrees, but a ministry all of whom should have seminary training. If this were possible, how much more could and would be accomplished in the Church, because the ministry—the key-men to any situation in the Church—would be equipped to cope adequately with situations which might arise.

Denominations Merge.—

In Cleveland, Ohio, November 16th, at an affiliation service held at St. Peter's Church, the Evangelical Church of North America, and the Congregational Church formally completed their merger. On the following evening, a fellowship service was held, and plans for unified action were discussed. The old line of demarcation has disappeared.

Step by step the Church is marching on toward the final goal of union. God is answering the prayer of His Son. Centuries have come and gone, and not yet has His prayer been answered; but today it is being answered before our eyes. Time counts not with God. He prepares the way, then answers prayer, even the prayer of His beloved Son. In like manner does He hear and answer the prayers of His children. Let us, therefore, join with Christ our voices petitioning that they may be one, even as Christ and the Father are one.

A Trial to Watch.—

On the same day, two very prominent people announced to the world two tremendous gifts. One of the gifts, by Mr. J. B. Duke, was about four times as large as the gift by Mr. George Eastman, but the latter may prove far more interesting. Both these great gifts go to educational and philanthropic projects. Mr. Eastman, in his gift, disposed of the last large block of kodak stock in his possession, amounting to $12,500,000. Six million of this went to Rochester University to add to previous gifts of twenty-three millions by Mr. Eastman, $4,500,000 went to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology to add to the eleven millions given when Mr. Eastman was its mysterious "Mr. Smith." Gifts of one million dollars each went to Hampton and Tuskeegee Institutes for colored people, who thought themselves faced with the tasks of raising five hundred thousand dollars each; but it is not the size of Mr. Eastman's gifts which make them interesting, but the reason which he gave to the world for giving the gifts.

Mr. Eastman stated that this was the last of his kodak holdings, and that now he would go to work for a group of public institutions. He wanted to know how it will feel to disengage himself from public affairs. The thing which will be interesting to the public will be what Mr. Eastman will have to say when his trial has had time to bring results.

Cleveland Faces a Problem.—

As the Churches of Cleveland, Ohio, are swinging into the religious campaign of the winter, a careful survey of the religious situation shows that, while there are 352,000 Protestants belonging to 358 Protestant Churches in the city, 330,000 Catholics with 78 Churches, 85,000 Jews with 29 synagogues and 15,000 Greek Orthodox with 20 Churches, there are still in the city 300,000 persons totally unreached. This total includes 110,000 children who are receiving absolutely no religious instructions.

In this situation, Cleveland is facing a really serious problem. Any city—and most cities are not far behind Cleveland, in proportion to population—which has such a situation to face, is coping with a grave problem indeed. Such an existing circumstance affords no direct indictment against the Church, but it does mean that we, as Christian people, have not fully performed our duty as individuals to witness for Jesus. What we need today is to have it laid upon our hearts that we are witnesses for Him, and that our work begins in Jerusalem which is at home and now.

Christmas Everywhere!

By Phillips Brooks.

Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!
Christmas in lands of the fir tree and pine,
Christmas in lands of the palm tree and vine,
Christmas where corn fields lie sunny and bright,
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!

For the Christ-child who comes is Master of all,
No palace too great and no cottage too small;
The angels who welcome Him sing from the height,
"In the City of David, a King in His might."
Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!

Then let every heart keep its Christmas within,
Christ's pity for sorrow, Christ's hatred of sin,
Christ's care for the weakest, Christ's courage for right,
Christ's dread of the darkness, Christ's love of the light.
Everywhere, Everywhere, Christmas tonight!

That is a fine Thanksgiving report of the Christian Orphanage in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. If you did not read it, hunt up your paper and see how liberally our people are giving to this institution.

The Benning National Forest, near Columbus, Ga., has just been added to the list of new forest preserves of the United States. The new forest covers about 78,500 acres, and has an excellent stand of Southern pine timber.

Bankers have estimated that more than 400 million dollars is hidden away in houses and similar hiding-places by people who are afraid to trust banks. But in spite of this, for every dollar hoarded, forty-six dollars is banked.

America has more than twenty-two million telephones in use, or more than the rest of the world combined. There are more telephones in New York than in Great Britain and the north of Ireland, and more in Chicago than all of France.

Christmas greeting and best wishes to every one! and as you send your tokens and give your gifts to bring joy into other lives, may your own heart be filled with the spirit of the season, and may you be made to rejoice in Him whose birth you celebrate.

The Pan-American countries are planning to erect a lighthouse in the harbor of Santo Domingo, the city Columbus loved so well, which will serve as a tomb for the great discoverer. The lighthouse will be 1,000 feet high and will act as a guide for ships at sea.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Handbook has been mailed out. While it contains much desirable information, it should better represent the work of these Conventions. Let the secretaries be most prompt in sending in their minutes. Begin now to get ready for your next Convention.

What is claimed to be the first office in the air is in use on the trans-American air line between New York and San Francisco, over which flies an airway inspcetor who supervises the maintenance of the guiding signs and lights along the 3,000-mile route. The machine has a desk, chairs and table, and the inspector is accompanied by a clerk, who operates a typewriter while in flight.

The first tin can was inspired by Napoleon Bonaparte, who offered a prize of 12,000 francs to any one who would invent a way of preserving perishable vegetables for his mariners to eat on their long voyages. In 1809 the money was handed over to Nicolas Appert, an uneducated pickler, who discovered that cooking foods in hermetically sealed containers made it possible to keep them indefinitely.

The planning of communities is probably the greatest undertaking that we have before us. It is the making of the mold in which future generations will be formed. Plainly, it is not a task for one group, one profession; still less for any section of one group or one profession. Community planning is a co-operative undertaking. Its aims and its technique are of such a nature, however, that architects, because of their training and experience, should be fitted to take a leading part.

A remarkable demonstration of electrical transmission of pictures was given when several photographs and sketches were transmitted from London to New York by a new wireless method developed by the Radio Corporation of America and called the photo-radiogram system. The time consumed in projecting each picture across the Atlantic was about twenty minutes, and while some of the pictures were far from perfect, as received in New York, the results in general were excellent, and open up a wide field of usefulness.

The Department of Agriculture says that sugar from the sugar cane was probably known in China 2,000 years before it was used in Europe. Several centuries before Christ, Greek physicians called sugar by the name of "Indian salt" and a "honey made from reeds." When merchants began to trade in the Indies, sugar was included among the spices, perfumes and other rare and costly things carried to the Western countries of Europe. At this time it was used exclusively in the preparation of medicines. When sugar was first introduced as a food, it was regarded with suspicion. It was said to be heating, to be bad for the lungs and to cause apoplexy.

THE CHRISTMAS TREE THAT SATISFIES.

No human being, of himself, is satisfied. For this reason, Christ came into the world. Last Christmas, Paul Rader sent to his personal friends a strikingly beautiful Christmas message. He said, in part: "How beautiful a type of our loving Lord is the Christmas tree. It is cut down, as He was, for the use of others; cut down and taken from His home to our home for joy. His cutting down on that cruel cross, becoming a curse for us, satisfied—yes, praise God! fully satisfied—every claim against us. The Christmas tree sparkles with iridescent light, cheerily, merrily, brightening the room and the happy faces; but He is light with all its glow and glory of color, cheering, lighting, warming, comforting, delighting. His light alone satisfies; for it alone can put away all darkness, letting us 'walk in the light, as He is in the light.' This light alone brings fellowship. Loneliness cannot reach us—He satisfies. The Christmas tree is loaded with presents. He came to give gifts to men—the more abundant life for spirit, soul, and body. In Him and through Him for us today are gifts, gifts, gifts for every need. Our names are written on them, but we have never opened them. Will you with me this Christmas draw up close to Him, 'thankful, oh so thankful, dear Lord,' and take! take! take! 'For He satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.'"

POUNDED.

On answering a call at our door on the night of November 21st, we were greeted by about twenty-five members of our Windsor Church. They came, bringing many good things to eat for the new minister and wife; things too numerous to mention. It was indeed a pleasant surprise to us, and words failed us as we tried to express our appreciation. After a happy hour together, the members returned to their homes, leaving us with what we speak of as an old-fashioned pounding and with a grand and glorious feeling, such as only ministers and their wives experience on such occasions. W. D. HARWARD.

HOW YOU SHOULD DRESS.

How do you dress in cold weather? Because the calendar says it is winter, do you dress in heavy underwear and stockings, regardless of the temperature of the day?

I used to get a letter from my mother at the beginning of each winter. She warned me to put on my heaviest underwear and to get some wool socks and high shoes. The dear old woman wrote:

"Be sure to wear a heavy overcoat and bundle up your neck and chest. Keep your hands and feet warm."

Of course, where I lived we had deep snow and low temperature.

There were few days in winter when the warmest clothing was not required. That was particularly true because we lived under simple conditions, without central heating and the modern means of keeping homes comfortable.

I cannot resist the temptation of saying that too many people coddle themselves. You would think to see the wrappings they put on that they are dealing with hot-house plants instead of human beings. Of course I believe that any child is worth more than all the wealth of the world, but you do not save the child by overdressing him. You make him soft and weaken his powers for fighting the elements.

We grow strong by using our muscles. Before we run we must walk. We cannot fight off the cold unless our bodily surfaces are somewhat hardened to the weather.

Savage tribes wear almost no clothing, even in the winter-time. They do not feel the cold any more than we feel it on our face and hands. Let a part of the body which is normally covered be exposed to the outer air, and it is chilled at once.

I do not advocate the wearing of sheer garments in winter weather. What seems the sensible thing to do is to have the sheer garments to wear in comfortable rooms, but outdoors there should be added protection because of the low temperature.

If you can afford it, it is a good thing to have two or three weights of outer garments, so as to adjust your protection to the degree of temperature. One piece of advice I like to repeat every year. That is—keep the feet dry. In wet weather, rubbers or overshoes should be used. If you actually get your feet wet, make a change of shoes and stockings. Do not continue your work with damp feet.

There is another way to get damp feet besides stepping in a puddle of water. You can get damp feet by wearing stockings that are too heavy and too warm. The feet perspire and the stockings become damp. Then by the evaporation of the moisture, pretty soon the feet are chilled and you have chillblains.

Use good sense in the matter of your clothing, and I am satisfied you will have a more comfortable winter than perhaps you have ever had before. Adapt your clothing to the temperature and your happiness will be increased.

ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

The Romans were the originators of the Christmas tree, though their ceremony had little to do with the modern idea of the Christmas spirit. They began by hanging small masks of Bacchus, the god of wine, upon the grape vines in the belief that the spot would become unusually fruitful. The occasion was made one of merrymaking and dissipation. After the advent of Christianity, it was converted into the Christmas-tree celebration.

YOUR OFFICIAL BOARD.

We hope no pastor will let these winter weeks of the stewardship period go by without at least one stewardship study class. We earnestly urge that the officials of the Church form one such class. The Church officers of this day should be informed on this great subject that is engaging the great business minds of the day. Gather your trustees, deacons, clerks, treasures, superintendents, and presidents into one class, secure a good book, and you will be surprised at their interest, the results spiritually, and in a business way in your Church.

A GIFT FOR CHRISTMAS.

Many people desire to give a helpful present to their friends, husbands, sons, daughters. May we suggest that one of the most interesting, helpful stewardship books would be such a suitable gift. Right now, nearly all Churches and denominations are making a special study of this great theme. The great magazines are writing on it. A well-informed churchman should not be behind on this great question of the day. Your pastor, husband, friend, young people could be helped by a very moderate-priced book of this kind. Be sure to put one of the new diaries among their gifts. Sunday School teachers are ordering for their classes.

CHURCH FINANCE METHODS.

The Church should set the standard in every community in all good things. You want business efficiency, integrity, and honesty to prevail in your community. The Church should set the example. Is it too much to say that it should be run on a strictly cash basis? We think not. When a salary is due the pastor, janitor, organist, why should they not be paid? When any bill is due, why should it not be paid? When you work for another you expect to be paid Saturday night, or at the end of the month, according to agreement. So your Church should be run on a cash basis. Your denominational benevolent work, missions, education, etc., is a joint obligation with the other Churches of your Conference and Convention. Why should not your missionaries and other obligations be paid regularly by you and by your Church? You have the same obligation to pay your missionaries as you have your pastor. Missionaries, teachers, Bible women, kindergarten workers, field secretaries, are employed by your denomination through properly appointed agencies and their salaries and other obligations are dependent upon the money paid by the Churches—your Church.

The Church has the business ability. There are no finer business men than the men who compose the officials of your Church. Look at their farms, banks, stores, offices. You will find that in these they use the most improved business methods. You will likely find that they are pointed out as among the leading business men of your community. They have money, integrity, and business ability. They prize their credit. They have the respect and confidence of the community. Those same Christian business men should set the standard in their Churches, so that the good name and credit of your Church should be maintained.

WHAT SOME CHURCHES NEED.

What most unsuccessful Churches need most just now is a large number of resignations from certain members, forwarded to the officers with this simple statement:

"Gentlemen,—For many years I have belonged to Grace Church, in Ourtown. I have little to show for it. Belonging to it has not made me any kinder, or more charitable, or more lovely of character—less, if anything. Doubtless, this is my own fault. I have gone there on Sundays and have sung, 'I Love Thy Zion, Lord,' and then I have come back home to pick flaws with everything in it, from the color of the carpet and the length of the prayer to the soprano's hat and the squeaky shoes of old Bro. Goodenough, who takes up the collection. I have kicked about the expenses, fussed about the ventilation, complained about the preacher, and the snow on the steps, and the dirt in the basement, and the kind of hymn-book we use. I know I shall certainly lose my soul if I keep on at this gait. And I can't seem to stop it. I have been at it so long that it has become an obsession. I have tried to quit it, but the habit is too strong. I knock the Church to my family, to the other members, to neighbors belonging to other Churches. So I am getting out for the sake of my own soul's salvation—to say nothing of the high benefit I know I am conferring upon Grace Church by this resolution."

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR THE CHURCHES.

(Sunday, Jan. 4, to Saturday, Jan. 10, 1925.)

Our one Lord calls us at the beginning of another year to join our hearts and minds in united thanksgiving, confession, and petition. Never was the measure of our blessings so full and overflowing. Even in our affliction, the Lord our God is merciful and gracious. Let us give thanks "for whoso offereth the sacrifice of thanksgiving glorifieth me and prepareth a way that I may show him the salvation of God."—Psa. 50:23.

Never was there deeper need for penitence. As individuals, as nations, as a Church, we have failed in our duty. We have done what we ought not to have done and we have left undone the things we ought to have done.

Never was there deeper need for petition. Confronted by our own personal necessities and by the needs of the world, we have to transcend the failures of the past, and yet the past is the only ground on which we can build. We must seek in the light of Christ to see light upon the problem of winning out of the imperfect past itself a future in accord with the mind and will of God.

Only God can help us. Let us pray.

We cannot doubt that the Spirit of God is abroad in the world. This is the assurance of our Lord Himself. It is the divine Spirit who is making men discontented with conflict and division and quickening their hope and purpose toward a better order on earth. It is He who is leading men, according to Christ's promise, into the truth, and where He is, there men are aware of liberty.

Let us open our lives in sincerity and love to the fullest realization of the presence of God. Laying aside all pride and prejudice, all self-satisfaction and judgment of others, all malice and cunning, all party strife and ill will, may we ever let Christ dwell in us richly.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honorable, whatsoever things are of good report, if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things.

"In nothing be anxious; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God.

"And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."—Philil. 4:8-6, 7.

Yours in the faith and fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ,

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT.

"What are you going to give your wife for Christmas?"

Some of my neighbors and I were sitting around the stove in our village store waiting for the evening mail to come in when one of them suddenly asked the question which had been secretly troubling all of us for some time back. We glanced rather sheepishly at one another, I am afraid. Presently Mr. H—— spoke up:

"Don't know what I'm going to give mine. Seems to me she's got about everything she needs. I've given her a fur coat, and a watch, and pocketbooks, and umbrellas and a vacuum cleaner, and a toaster and a washing-machine and silverware, and, and—oh about everything you can think of, but bless me if I can think of a single new thing this year. What you going to give yours, Joe?"

Joe didn't know. Like most men, he found it a problem that got harder and harder as the years rolled by. Neither did any of the others—all but one, that is, a substantial citizen of the neighborhood who had said nothing, but sat listening to the conversation with a quiet smile lighting up his face. One of the men noticed it and demanded:

"What are you grinning about, you old bluffer? I'll bet you haven't thought of anything any more than the rest of us."

"Oh, yes, I have. The trouble with you fellows is, you put off thinking about it until the last minute. I got my idea a year ago and I started in getting ready for this Christmas right after the first of last January.

"What's that? You started in buying your wife a Christmas present a year in advance? What is it—a tombstone, maybe?"

The man addressed did not join in the guffaw that greeted this rather misplaced attempt at humor. Instead, he replied calmly:

"I am going to give her something that will not wear out. Something that will not only increase in value as time goes on, but will remind her periodically of what I am trying to make the happiest holiday we have ever had. I am going to have Santa Claus give her a gilt-edged security that will pay her interest regularly in real money and that will lay the foundation of a nest-egg that will stand by her after I pass out. For I am going to do the same thing next year and other years after that."

"It's a good idea," remarked one of the men; "but do you realize what you are doing to the rest of us? Why as soon as that gets around this neighborhood you will have all of our wives reproaching us because we didn't do it too, and now it's too late. We cannot satisfy our wives with a Christmas present which we couldn't give them until a year from now."

"Oh, yes, you can," replied our neighbor, with the far-seeing mind. "You can start in right now to purchase a good security on installments. This year you can give her the receipt for the first installment, and next year, or sooner if you want to, you can hand her the security itself. What is more, she will think more of you for your thoughtfulness. Ordinary Christmas presents may be lost or forgotten, but this kind goes on reminding the owner of the giver every time the interest comes in. Try it and see."

And the party dispersed as the mail was handed out.—Theodore Waters.

PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by, all.

THE PURPOSE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The purpose of this Church is to cultivate a spirit of union among the followers of our Lord Jesus Christ of every persuasion, and to secure, if possible, the associate efforts of all true religious teachers in pointing the wicked to "the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world."

The peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and distracted the Christian world are remanded to private judgment, and hence cease to be matters for debate, only in so far as may be necessary to prevent a sectarian influence from entering the Church.

This Church requires no compromise of faith on the part of any child of God in order to communion or fellowship; here denominational distinctions cease to exist, and Christian love binds the brotherhood together.

The purpose of this Church will be consummated in the conversion of the world and the union of all Christians.

A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM.

"And it came to pass in those days, that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed.

(And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius was Governor of Syria.)

"And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city.

"And Joseph also went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judaea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem (because he was of the house and lineage of David);

"To be taxed, with Mary, his espoused wife, being great with child.

"And so it was that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered.

"And she brought forth her first-born Son, and wrapped Him in swaddling clothes, and laid Him in a manger; because there was no room for them in the inn.

"And there were in the same country shepherds, abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night.

"And, lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid.

"And the angel said unto them, Fear not: for, behold! I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people.

"For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord.

"And this shall be a sign unto you: Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger.

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying:

"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men."—Luke 2:1-14.

It matters little now as to what communion, congregation or conference fastened upon December 25th as the time of the nativity of our Saviour. Historians tell us that the day and the event were not celebrated before the fourth century, and there was no uniformity in the period of observing the nativity among the early Churches. Neither does it matter that we have taken from the Catholics their mass and attached it to our Christ, nor that the Catholic Church celebrates three masses at Christmas, namely: at midnight, at daybreak, and in the morning; neither does it matter that Scotch Presbyterians and English Nonconformists have generally rejected all religious observance of the day as "a human invention and of savoring too much of papistry." What does matter, is the occasion itself as we now have it, and the spirit that prompts and permeates it.

Of all the festive seasons or days observed, none are comparable to that of Christmas. Whether it be the right time or the wrong time, it celebrates the birth of a Child, and Christmas is fundamentally and primarily the children's time and season. Long before the event began, the prophet Isaiah (ch. 11:16) had very pointedly declared, "And a little Child shall lead them." This prophecy has its fulfillment in nothing more powerfully and pointedly than in the fact and the spirit of the Christmas time and season. Children are showing us how to keep and to promote a holiday. The adults of the world have tried time and time again by issuing proclamations, by decrees and statutes, to establish a national or international holiday. But no holiday or festive occasion has ever yet been established comparable to our Christmas time, either in spirit or in universality; and this, too, without the proclamation of any potentate, the act of any parliament, or the decree of any government. We may, if we will, deny the leadership of childhood in many particulars, but we are compelled to admit that the children have led the world in the establishment and in the observance of a holiday. This much from the historical and purely human point of view.

But there is a deeper and a divine side to the occasion, whenever and however begun, that cannot be ignored. Through the leadership of our children, we celebrate, how wisely or unwisely need not be said, the advent into the world of the one and only Child of a virgin. On Christmas Day we shall not debate the parenthood of Mary's Son; we shall sing our Christmas carrols, rejoice in giving gifts, take heart that there was born into the world a Man-Child at whose nativity the heavenly host sang, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward men." No other child ever had such advent, and of no other child had a prophet declared (Isa. 7:14) "A virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and shall call His name Immanuel." And of no other child have two of his most authentic biographers declared that in this child the prophecy was fulfilled; all of which comes simply to this: That in Him, to use a fond word of Emerson, God and man "ensphere." Oh, Child God! Oh, Child of woman born! Thou art indeed capable and competent to establish in the world a glorious and festive season such as no other of woman-born could establish! Man rising to speak His highest and holiest sentiments! God descending to put a hymn of praise upon the faltering, fainting lips of man! To bring to the earth life for death, beauty for ashes, hope for despair! In this Child, God was manifesting all the potentialities and possibilities of children born of womankind. In this Child, womankind, going down into the mysterious darkness of that event called birth, brings to the world that glorious achievement called life, in which all the potentialities and possibilities of infinite and sublime achievement dwell.

The Christmas spirit is the spirit of joyous and happy childhood; of divine and holy attitudes and manifestations. We shall sing our songs, give our gifts, receive our tokens of esteem and of sweet friendship. In brief, during this season, we shall live in, as we help to create about us, a benevolent attitude; we shall breathe the spirit of gifts and of giving; we shall live in one glad day of beatific peace and right good will among our fellows. For unto us a Child is born, into the world a child has come, who will never be satisfied until, through His leadership, He shall have made all the days of the year a Happy Christmas Day and shall have created in the world a holy, a happy, a benevolent atmosphere and established in the world a spirit of unselfishness and of devotion to the happiness and welfare of others.

"For unto us a Child is born, unto us a Son is given; and the government shall be upon His shoulders; and His name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

THE CHURCH AND THE COMMUNITY.

The Federal Council, in its recent quadrennial session, spoke in no uncertain terms of the blessings and benefits accruing to a community when the Churches of that community united on a progressive program. The wicked waste of the Churches, not only of money, but of energy and opportunity, operating in competition rather than in co-operation for community betterment, was emphasized. The spirit of co-operation is developed, and no unit or group should feel the impact of this spirit more intensely and more helpfully than the community. The Churches have magnified their differences long enough to the everlasting hurt of Protestantism. The hour has struck when they must magnify the things on which they agree.

The community needs no sectarian or denominational righteousness to lift it to the high level of Christian living and activity. It needs that righteousness which is of God and is incarnate in His Son. To make this righteousness articulate in the community, in the individual lives of the people of the community, is the superlative task, not of a denomination, but of Christendom.

One came away from the Federal Council feeling that the day of the one Sunday, or two Sundays, a month preaching in the community was over, or was doomed. The people are demanding; the lives, labors, activities of the individuals of the community are demanding something more of their preacher and of their pulpit than that of a sermon, whether delivered once, or twice, or thrice per month. That is not sufficient, and cannot, and will not, control for good the thought and activities of the community. In the onward sweep and progress of our age, educationally, industrially, morally, spiritually, the Church has a greater task on its hand than that of holding a preaching service occasionally, however good and wholesome that preaching service may be. The people of the community are demanding more of their Church than this. They are willing to invest their money and their lives in an institution or an enterprise that is active, aggressive, and uplifting; but not willing to invest their life and their money in an enterprise or an institution that is idle about 99-100ths of the time—vacant, empty, unoccupied, save for a few brief periods of the year. The Church of the present faces the fact that it must train the young and lead the youth to Christ; that it must have a hand and heart in shaping the activities of the community and in making real contributions to the life and usefulness, to the joy and service of the community. The Church is engaged in soul-saving, and to make the soul safe for Christ and the kingdom, the entire individual must be Christianized.

"What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?"

The whole Church must unite in its efforts to save the whole man—soul, mind and body. This is the task of the Church today; this is the demand of the Church. In many communities the Churches are united in a program of progress for the community in all that pertains to the salvation of the community; to the development and the betterment of the community. This is the spirit of the Master as the Church is called upon to interpret Him today. At any rate, this was the idea kept in the foreground of the discussion of this all-important topic at the great session of the Federal Council.

MILESTONE IN CHRISTIAN CO-OPERATION.

The outstanding impression created by the quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches in Atlanta, December 3-9, was that a new level of Church co-operation has been reached. On every hand the comment was heard that the Atlanta meeting clearly revealed a deepening trust among the denominations, a clearer consciousness of common purposes and a greater readiness for co-operative service.

The meeting, which began under the presidency of Dr. Robert E. Speer, the head of the council, during the past four years, chose as its president for the coming term Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, pastor of the Central Congregational Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Cadman is the first active pastor to be elected to the presidency of the council, and his selection was interpreted not only as a tribute to a great Christian leader, but also as a desire to exalt the pastorate in the thinking and planning of the council.

The quadrennial meeting, beyond doubt, revealed a growing unity among the Churches of the country. The council was regarded by those in attendance as simply the outward expression of an inner unity already existing. As Dr. Speer said in reviewing the development of Christian co-operation during the quadrennium, "That there is a common mind among the Churches, is illustrated in an unforgettable way by the reaction among them against discriminatory treatment of the Japanese in our recent immigration law. With practical unanimity, the great Christian bodies of the country have voiced their conviction that they cannot rest until a more Christian method of dealing with this great racial problem is found." And Bishop William F. McDowell, in summarizing the work of the Washington committee, declared: "Through the Federal Council, the Protestant Churches have made an impression upon the nation that they can work together and are actually working together now with vitality and power."

At the same time, it was recognized that there is need for a far greater unity among Churches than they yet possess. The report of the committee on policy, drafted by a large committee which included representatives of each of the constituent denominations, expressed this judgment in the following words:

"The Protestant Churches see more clearly than ever the need of preserving their inheritance of freedom and individual responsibility, and at the same time of securing the gain of solidarity, of effective organization, and of united and adequately directed effort. We have been afraid of centralization, and so distrustful of delegated control or authority that we have preferred to let work go undone and great tasks of the Church lie unperformed rather than run the risk of any abridgment of our separated autonomies.

"The Churches are truly seeking for a satisfactory method of expressing a common life and accomplishing a common work, of combining unity and freedom, of preserving our Protestant inheritance, and yet at the same time fulfilling the ideal of the Apostles' Creed of the holy catholic Church, the instrument of Christ for the salvation of the world."

The quadrennial meeting of the council also revealed a determination on the part of the Churches to deal courageously with the task of making Christ the Lord of every phase of human life. The problems of racial and international relationships were especially to the fore. The question of co-operation, justice and good will between the white and negro peoples was discussed with the utmost candor and sympathy. Outstanding Southern leaders like Dr. M. Ashby Jones, of Atlanta, and Bishop Frederick F. Reese, of Savannah, made eloquent appeals that, in our race relations, Christ should be taken seriously. Negro leaders like Bishop George C. Clement, of the African M. E. Zion Church, and President John Hope, of Morehouse College, expressed with equal conviction the judgment that the one hope for better relations between the races lies in the Churches making earnest with the Christian gospel. The world-wide character of the racial problems of today was indicated by the emphasis given to the necessity for righting the wrong done the Japanese people by the recent immigration act. In a ringing letter to the council, Hon. Cyrus E. Woods, recently the ambassador from the United States to Japan. declared that the exclusion act was "an international disaster of the first magnitude," and called upon the Christian Churches to take the leadership in bringing about greater friendship between America and Japan.

The meaning of the gospel for our industrial, economic and social life was not overlooked. The keynote message on this subject, delivered by Bishop Francis J. McConnell, left no one in doubt as to whether the Churches represented in the council meant to pursue a policy of dealing vigorously with the problems involved. That these issues are of great complexity and demand the most thorough study and wise judgment was recognized, and enthusiastic approval was given to the enlarging plans of the council along the line of research, as a means of securing the information without which wise and effective action is impossible. At no time was there any disposition manifested to turn back from the effort to bring Christian principles to bear upon every realm of human life. In the words of Dr. Speer's summary of what we have to learn from the past four years: "The Churches must not be intimidated from doing what they ought to do because of fear of making mistakes or of doing what they ought not to do."

The demand of the Christian conscience for the outlawry of war was the most conspicuous single note of the sessions. The platform for the council in the international field, adopted after extended discussions, calls for support of the permanent court of international justice, for the participation of the United in codifying and extending international law, for the pacific settlement of every international dispute, and for international agencies through which the combined moral condemnation of the world can be brought to bear upon an aggressor nation. A drastic reduction of armaments by all nations is urged, and "full, open and friendly relations between the United States and the League of Nations, without commitments which would involve us in the local politics of European or other nations."

The international outreach of the Churches themselves was symbolized by the presence of leaders of the Christian movement in many other lands. Among the foreign representatives who were in attendance were Rev. A. K. Reischauer, of the National Christian Council of Japan; Rev. Adolf Keller, of the Central Bureau for Relief of the Evangelical Churches of Europe, Zurich, Switzerland; Prof. Julius Richter, of the University of Berlin; Rev. Samuel M. Zwemer, of Egypt; Rev. H. C. Tucker, of the committee on co-operation in Brazil; Rev. T. Albert Moore, representative of the joint committee on Church union of Canada; and Sir Willoughby Dickinson, of London, honorary secretary of the World Alliance for International Friendship through Churches.

The one question on which any serious division of opinion arose concerned the status of the chaplains in the army and navy. A special committee of twelve was created to study the whole problem during the coming year and to report at the meeting of the executive committee next December.

Underlying the whole program and all the discussions of the six-day meeting was an insistent emphasis upon the necessity for the spirit of evangelism and of personal loyalty to Christ. At noonday throughout the session a series of inspirational meetings on "The Call to Personal Religion" was held, which lifted the thinking of the council above the details of organization and administration into a deeply spiritual atmosphere. Not only was it recognized that there is an urgent nede for greater attention by the Churches to the duty of direct evangelism, but there was also a recognition that every phase of the Churches work must be infused with the evangelistic spirit and ideal. In the words of the report of the committee on policy: "The greatest of all problems before the Churches today is how we may present Christ more compellingly to the mind and heart of our day, so that He will become the Lord of men's consciences and Master of their lives."

TOWELS FOR FLAGS.

The small republic of Armenia, although permitted to elect its own President and manage its local affairs, is, nevertheless, regarded by the Russians as a part of Russia, so a Russian official asked that the children of the great Near East Relief Orphanage at Alexandropol, Armenia, should not carry the American flag when they marched to the fields from their dormitories, the great buildings which were formerly the barracks of Russian soldiers.

When there are 25,000 children, and usually as many as 500 go out at one time to work, or two or three hundred go down to the river together on "bath days," they never just go—they march; and as they march, they sing, which makes the way seem shorter. The children of the Alexandropol Orphanage, too, liked to carry the American flag, because it was that flag that had protected them in the days of war.

But the Russian officials said that by carrying that flag on all occasions, children were really thinking that it was their flag, and that America was their country, whereas they belonged to Russia. And the orphanage director told them that the order must be obeyed.

Not long ago, the children were given a holiday. Of course, there would be a parade on the grounds around the orphanage buildings. These grounds were once parade grounds of the soldiers, and there is plenty of room to march. But what would a parade be without a flag? There were many downcast faces as the children talked about it, until somebody finally had a bright idea, and word was passed among the groups. When a little later the lines were formed and the order given to march, thousands of small arms were raised, and the children's white towels fluttered in the breeze. But the Russian officer never noticed that on each towel were stamped the words, "Medical Department, U. S. A."

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

Trinity College, by changing its name to Duke University, has the opportunity to become one of the greatest Christian institutions of higher learning in the world. On December 29th, the trustees will meet to decide the matter. Here is hoping they will accede to the proposal.

If they do, Trinity College will no doubt be the undergraduate department of Duke University, a very happy arrangement. But whether this be the case or not, the trustees owe it to the cause of Christian education, the real need of the hour, to meet the conditions and secure for the educational work of the kingdom the vast sum of money they are offered.

Mr. J. B. Duke, a distinguished layman of the Methodist Church, has made the proposal to donate $6,000,000 immediately for buildings and to provide for current income, 32 per cent of a trust fund of $40,000,000, provided Trinity becomes Duke University. Here is the opportunity to build a great institution, one that will rank with the wealthiest of the world.

The mere fact that Duke University will be so rich and powerful adds to the burdens of the smaller colleges like Elon. The tendency in American life throughout is toward the large and powerful. It requires grace to rejoice over the appearance on the horizon of such a towering giant as this Christian university will be. Yet, I am glad that the cause of Christ is thus to prosper in our midst, even though it adds heavier burdens for us.

Elon does not aspire to be a large college. We recognize the need for a Christian university such as Duke is to be. Our Church is not able to foster such an institution. We also recognize that there is a distinct place for the small college, high in purpose and sound in scholarship, whose best graduates will do extended work in the graduate departments of the larger institutions such as Duke. There is a worthy and honorable place of service for such a college.

But the solemn fact, nevertheless, is that these smaller institutionus must have modern plants and equipment, competent faculties, and sufficient income from endowment to meet the requirements of the standardizing agencies, or they face an inevitable loss of prestige, and sooner or later are doomed to terminate their careers. It should not dismay our people to know this. When the physician diagnoses our case and tells us our situation, we should not give up, but bestir ourselves to meet the conditions of health and life.

Duke University thus, without intending to do so, precipitates a crisis for the smaller Christian colleges of this State. They must find new resources or suffer. This is the Christmas message of a tense situation for higher Christian education in this year of our Lord 1924.

CENTRAL PERIOD OF CHRIST'S MINISTRY.

REVIEW.

By H. S. Hardcastle.

Following Jesus was never dull or commonplace. And those who company with Him as we go through this review of the past twelve lessons will get something of the thrill that must have come to those who went with Him in the days of His flesh. He who has an open mind and an open heart will say, "Truly, this Man was the Son of God" as He hears this Man speak as never man spake before, and sees Him do things in a fashion they had never seen. And if such an one is not entirely hardened, he will want to follow more closely the Master and walk in His way of life.

1. The Choice of the Twelve.—"Follow me," was the challenge that Jesus presented to men of all types and temperament. And they rose up and followed Him. He wanted them to be with Him for three reasons—to hear what He had to say; to see what He did; and to see what He was. And then He wanted them to go out to do three things—proclaim what He said; carry on what He did; and embody what He was. They were not perfect men. Perhaps He would have been glad to have had better men. But they were willing to give themselves to Him, and He took them, taught them, trained them, and loved them, and they went out to take the world for Him. Are we worthy to follow in their train? Are we carrying on their work?

2. The Sermon on the Mount.—There were certain fundamental principles which the citizens of the kingdom should know, and which they should embody in their lives. Not the least important of the duties and the privileges of the new order was prayer. And not the least important feature about prayer was its scope and spirit. Jesus taught His disciples the Lord's prayer. He taught them to say "our" Father, "our" bread, "our" sins; He taught them to pray, that His kingdom might come and that His will might be done, even on earth as in heaven. He taught them to pray that their sins might be forgiven only as we forgave others. He taught them to pray that they might be kept from temptation, but that when it did come they might be delivered from the evil one.

3. The Parable of the Sower.—Environment is a powerful factor in life. What a man gets in life depends largely opon what is in the man. There are four kinds of hearers in life—the stolid, the sentimental, the sordid, and the sincere. And even among the sincere hearers there were those of varying abilities, who brought forth varying fruitage.

4. The Stilling of the Storm.—A dramatic story of Christ as the Master of natural forces. Also a vivid way of showing our insufficiency when we try to get along without the Master.

5. The Prodigal Son.—A matchless and immortal story, embodying the most important principles of Christianity. Human Willfulness, the wages of sin, retribution, repentance, forgiveness, the everlasting love and compassion of God—all and more are written large in this story.

6. The Feeding of the Five Thousand.—A miracle demonstrating God's care for His children, the divine order for things, the significance of the lad in our midst, the co-operation between the human and the divine, the divine abundance.

7. Peter's Confession.—All that had gone before was meant for this. Who was the man who could do these things? Some said one thing; some another. But Peter, as the spokesman of the disciples, and under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, saw that He was the Christ, the Son of the living God. It is this insight, and this profession, that constitutes the rock on which the Church is to be built; and it is to men of this type of character that the welfare and future of the world is committed.

8. The Transfiguration.—The consciousness that He was to give His life a ransom for many came hard upon Peter's confession. The Christ of God must take the way of the cross. And in a dramatic experience, He was strengthened for that experience to which the world still points as the supreme example of the divine life in action.

9. The Good Samaritan.—Another matchless and immortal story, embodying great truths. The spirit which should characterize those who would walk with the Master must be the spirit which prompted this man—not even a Jew, but a despised Samaritan—to render service to his fellowman in need, and to do it, not only in a negative, but in a positive way.

10. The Man Born Blind.—This lesson showed the Master's responsiveness to human need, and His ability to meet human need. It also showed the importance of living in the light which one already has a means to more light, and to the value of personal experience in matters religious.

11. The Raising of Lazarus.—Jesus Christ is the resurrection and the life. Even though men be dead, they shall be alive in Him. And he that liveth and believeth in Him shall never die. This lesson applies to those who are spiritually dead.

12. Christmas Lesson—God's Gift to the World.—Because God loved, God wanted to save the world. And because He loved, He gave His only begotten Son, who Himself came because He loved. When God wanted to reveal Himself in fullest measure, He did it through a Man. That is still the way God reveals Himself best.

NEW EDUCATION BILL IN CONGRESS.

A bill providing for the formation of an executive department of education and relief has been introduced by Frederick W. Dallinger, chairman of the House education committee.

A secretary, appointed by the President, would head the department, aided by three assistants, heading education, public health, and veterans' relief agencies, which would take over the duties of numerous bureaus now under the jurisdiction of other departments.

The new bill, it is said, will take precedence on the calendar of the House before other educational bills now pending, including the Sterling-Reed bill. As the bill is drawn in accordance with the plank in the Republican platform, and in harmony with public utterances of President Coolidge, proponents of the bill expect favorable action at this session of Congress.

The bill carries no authorization or appropriation of Federal aid for education. The National Education Association and other organizations supporting the movement for a department of education are not inclined to indorse the Dallinger bill, as they fear that the important interests of public education will be subordinated to non-educational government units proposed to be incorporated in the department. They contend that education is of sufficient importance to justify a department of its own.

VALUE OF COLLEGE EDUCATION.

According to the press reports, the dean of the agricultural college of the University of Minnesota recently discovered something of more than usual interest to farmers. It might be said that the findings are of equal importance to those of all walks in life. It is said that upon studying a large number of cases he has found that, on an average, farmers of high school education earn about $500 per year, while those of complete college education are averaging more than $3,000 per annum.

There is no hocus-pocus about this. There is no mystical magic accompanying an education that enables the thoroughly trained mind to transmute the baser things of life into gold or silver. It all comes about by the trained mind being able to more intelligently handle the problems that come daily demanding immediate solution.

The dean was looking at this from the material side. As Christian workers, it is ours to look at it from the spiritual side and the service side. If a complete college education will multiply by six a farmer's ability to make money, will it not in like manner multiply ministers' or other Christian workers' ability to do good?

REIDSVILLE.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN SUN:

Doubtless, you have learned that I had received a call from the Reidsville Church, and I am happy to say that I have accepted the call, and was present with these good people and conducted both services, morning and evening, Sunday, December 14th, which was the beginning of my work as their pastor. I was to have been with them the first Sunday in December, but at that time I was confined to my bed with grippe, which kept me in bed for several days. At present I feel almost well again.

I was inspired as I viewed the splendid Sunday School of our Reidsville Church yesterday—almost 300, mostly boys and girls with bright faces, gathered there for religious instruction. I find that the school is doing very efficient work, and I feel that their efforts, both in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor, are worthy of mention in the columns of our Church paper.

As I begin this work with such a bright outlook, I am deeply impressed with the words of our Lord when He said: "The harvest truly is plenteous, and say not there is yet four months unto the harvest, for the fields are white already." And I say: "Here am I, Lord; send me."

We shall soon be in our new home at Reidsville, and we enter our labors there with great hopes and a consciousness of the need of divine guidance. I trust that we shall have occasion often to send a message for our paper to tell others of what the Lord has done for us in achieving through human instrumentality as we go forth in His name.

I also promise that we shall endeavor to increase the circulation of THE SUN in Reidsville. I pray that the time may soon come when no home representing the Christian Church will be without its most valuable and helpful weekly visits and instructions. Surely there is no other means by which we can learn of our work in the South, and when we learn of how much is being done it gives courage and fortitude to press on toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Jesus Christ.

Not in a boastful spirit, but with a prayerful mind, we are looking forward for great blessings and splendid results, because we find that we have many faithful and loyal workers at Reidsville that are going to labor and pray with us, without which no pastor can succeed. Remember our work in your talks with the Master.

Fraternally,

R. A. WHITTEN.

P. S.: We cannot refrain just here from mentioning our Pleasant Ridge work. A more loyal and willing people we have yet to meet. They too, have many loyal members that both labor and pray for the work, and a great future is in store for this congregation. They hope to soon erect a new house of worship, and I am confident that whatever these good people undertake in His name will be done. R. A. W.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

CHRISTMAS GREETING.

We extend kindest Christmas greeting and best wishes to all our Forward Movement workers and givers; to all who have prayed for and encouraged this great work of our Church; to all our pastors who have encouraged and given to the work; to all our stewardship-finance secretaries in the regional Conventions, Conferences and local Churches; to all our tithers; to all who have signed continuation pledges that the necessary work may go on; and to all who shall give, pray and work for its continuation during 1925. May real Christmas joy be yours.

We are Counting on You.

The year is now closing. All Forward Movement subscriptions are now due. If you are in arrears, we urgently request that you remit any balance on your account. The tremendous needs and vital plans of our Christian Church for 1925 call for all the subscriptions. They are sorely needed to keep our work from suffering.

Better Church-Finance Methods.

The officers in the Churches are usually the best business men in the community. Personally, their credit is well established, and they handle money in a thoroughly business way. Why is it that these same men will often put up with a financial system in their Church that is inefficient, out of date, inadequate in every way? Some are actually dishonest and will allow misappropriations, admitted to be so by the very officers themselves. Funds given for a definite purpose are used for other purposes. Some Churches have an annual deficit; others let their bills run month after month. Bills for literature stand for months. Others are always borrowing money to pay current expenses. Some have notes running for years. A Church officer, a banker, recently said that if there was no money in the treasury the pastor should be content to wait for his salary. Churches have admitted that they were using benevolent funds to pay current expenses, and that it was dishonest. Some Churches do this regularly. Some Churches think only of themselves—their local work. They forget that the Conference work is theirs just as the local Church is. They have no plan to support the educational and missionary work of the Church. Many good business men who are Church officials make no plans for support of the denominational agencies, colleges, orphanages, interdenominational bodies. All these are on the same basis and of equal importance with local work. Is God pleased with your Church financial system and methods? Do you give it the same thought locally and denominationally as you do your bank, store, office, business, and use as good business methods and plans? This is an appeal to introduce a financial system in your Church that will be Christian, efficient and fair for "ourselves" and for "others," for the local work and the larger work.

SECRETARY,
Bureau of Christian Stewardship and Promotion.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

It was that lady with the splendid character and love for her country, Miss Hedgepeth, that came to Carroll County, Va., some four years ago, backed by the Christian denomination. She planted herself in a community among strangers and where there was but little attention given to schooling or Christian worship. She immediately set about to erect Sunday School and a day school. She was very successful, and while she began her work in a house that is now used as the mission garage, yet her faith and love for the people was so great that she was content with just anywhere to start. Since then, in such a short length of time, there has been a great change in the community.

The work at Elk Spur has gone from a log-cabin school-house to that of a building worth more than three thousand dollars, of from one worker to a pastor, two teachers, and an all-time Christian worker. The field at this time in Carroll County has five workers—M. T. Sorrell, pastor; Miss M. H. Morey, all-time Christian worker; Mrs. M. T. Sorrell, principal; Miss Mattie Glasgo, and Miss Lettie Rigney, assistant teachers. The pastor and his wife are from Apex, Wake County, Catawba Springs Church. Miss Morey is from near Pittsburgh, Pa. Miss Glasgo is from Mt. Gilead Church, near Louisburg, N. C. Miss Lettie Rigney is of this county. While Mrs. Iola Meredith is not at this time on the staff, we would by no means forget that she is a great worker and one that carries with her the same love that she began with, as well as the helping hand she gave the work in the beginning.

Since the work began, we have developed a membership of about sixty-five or more members at both Churches—Elk Spur and Rocky Ford—and a very good Sunday School at both Churches. Rocky Ford, for more than a year, has had a prayer meeting every Thursday night. They are to be complimented for their ability to have an evergreen prayer meeting. In this time, more than three hundred people have been led to a definite knowledge of Christ as their personal Saviour. Some one may ask why it is that more have not united with the Church. One must remember that the Christian Church is a new denomination to these people, and it takes time to develop a permanent membership that we so much desire.

The following property is owned by the Christian Church here: one combined Church and school building; a parsonage and teacherage, built and furnished at a cost of about twenty-five hundred dollars; seventeen acres of land, worth about seven hundred dollars; a car, and some farming implements.

We are afraid that some people, both here and abroad, have probably a wrong idea of our work. We are not here for a temporary experiment, but for permanency; and while we are here for permanency, we would have each and every donor realize that every dollar given (which should be sent through Dr. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, marked for our Carroll County mountain work) is a dollar placed that is going to do three things. First, help lead souls to Christ; second, give Christian education; and third, give to your denomination and these most deserving people something that will continue to grow.

People are asking frequently: "Is it a sacrifice to go to the mountains?" My reply would be this: A long distance from any town of much size, very hard to get doctors, unusually bad roads, but little chance for food other than that produced on the average mountain farm, large snows drifting from a few inches to fifteen feet and more, temperature from zero upward. This list does not include the social and educational opportunities that are afforded elsewhere.

Now, here is the side that we workers have based our love for the work on. A people that are appreciative, kind, faithful, loving, as well as to be loved, I can truly say that no one could find a people that show as much hospitality as these people do. One cannot go to any home but that one will find the warmest welcome that could be given. They do not have anything that is good enough, apparently, for your service. The writer would not hesitate at any time of night or day to call upon any of the people to take their team and go and pull his mountain flivver in from a break down, a run off or a sticking in the mud. To pay them for such service or even offer them pay is nothing more than a good insult. The neighborly service they offer any one would make the hardest of hearts yield to the idea that such neighbors are hard to find. Would they divide their good eats and fresh meats with you? Yes, and to the very last. I might state many good things about these people, but the most I could say would be two small. Their faith and love for their Church are equal to their neighborly spirit.

Now, the vital question that comes to every one is: What can I do for our mountain work? The following outline is given:

We have about six acres of land that should be planted to peach and apple trees, by all means. About ten acres should be sown in grass. Some other improvements are needed on the farm. Clothing, books, donation of subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN to be placed in the different homes. This is one of our best ways of introducing the Church to the people. Then, help increase your Sunday School offering for mission, as this all comes to us. Now, one thing we could not miss speaking about without feeling that we had committed a great wrong. We are trying and putting forth every possible effort to build a Church at Rocky Ford. In order to do this we are putting it on a one dollar basis or share. Two of our faithful Sunday Schools—Wake Chapel and Catawba Springs, of Wake County—have bought one hundred shares, and besides some of their members have bought as high as fifty shares. We are not making any plea other than to tell you some of the ways whereby to help the mountain work. At some early date, Miss M. H. Morey will send to THE SUN for publication the list of shares bought and by whom. In purchasing shares, the money should be sent to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, secretary, Elon College, or Miss M. H. Morey, Fancy Gap, Va., who is secretary and treasurer of this building campaign, marking the same for Rocky Ford building. Those of the General Convention should send same to Dr. O. S. Thomas, Dayton, Ohio, marking same for the Rocky Ford building fund.

Other preaching places are as follows: Chestnut Oak, Bro. Francis King; Crooked Well, and frequently at Sandy Ridge. M. T. SORRELL,
Pastor.

WHERE THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH STANDS.

According to reports now presented from twenty-four denominations, our Church stands ninth down the list in per capita giving for benevolences, and next to the lowest in per capita giving for congregational expenses. Our per capita giving for all purposes is fourth from the bottom and is about two-thirds of the average amount contributed by the twenty-four denominations. We are glad to call attention to the fact that we are growing, however, and made a reasonable increase in per capita giving both for benevolences and current expenses over previous years. We have had much Church building going on this year. As we become more and more a Church of tithers we shall be finding the joy and ease of giving and will take a higher place in the lists.

WARREN H. DENISON,
Secretary.

A TRIP TO BERMUDA.

By Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D.

Any pastor can easily imagine the joy I experienced when, after a strenuous building campaign, my official board informed me that, in recognition of faithful services rendered, by a unanimous and enthusiastic vote they had voluntarily extended to myself and wife the privilege of a two weeks' trip to the Bermuda Islands, with all expenses paid. To say that it made me happy is to put it mildly. The prospect of the delightful rest that the trip would afford gave me a keen anticipation of the pleasures in store; but more than that, the thoughtfulness and love of a devoted people as expressed in the courtesy brought a joy to my heart that words cannot express. Such expressions of appreciation from a Church drive a pastor closer to God, and bind the hearts of his people even closer to his own. When a Church considers its pastor in such a magnanimous manner, it makes him thank God for the privilege of rendering whatever service to the Church he may have rendered, and makes him eager to render even a larger service to the Church in the future.

The official board was not only kind enough to extend myself and wife the courtesy of the trip, but, solicitous of our unbroken pleasure, gave us strict instructions to forget for the two weeks that there was a People's Christian Church in Dover, and not to write post-cards or letters back to the members.

It was most fortunate for us that my father and mother, and Mrs. Helfenstein's mother were visiting us at the time, enabling us to leave home without any anxiety about the welfare of the children.

So when the date came for sailing, with hearts free and cares behind, we bade farewell to Dover and our loved ones there, and started on our journey. A brief stay in New York City before taking the boat brought back pleasant memories of just eleven years before when we took boat at New York to sail to Glasgow. Then we were going away for study and work. This time we were going for rest and recuperation.

Many of the passengers to sail on the same ship with us had gathered at the pier when we arrived. We sailed on the Steamship St. George. This splendid vessel provided every demand for comfort, pleasure and entertainment. The ship was luxuriously provided with social rooms fitted with broad sofas and easy chairs, tables for writing, and a splendid library for the service of the passengers. The dining-room was furnished in a most inviting manner, and the meals and service could not be surpassed.

We had booked passage on the S. S. Victoria for the return trip, but changed and booked passage on the S. S. St. George, in order to secure a suitable sailing date. And indeed it was a "bon voyage" both going and returning. The steady running of the boat as it plowed through the trackless sea, the invigoration of the salt breezes from off the ocean, the warm sunshine ever growing warmer as we neared the Gulf Stream, all combined provided a most refreshing tonic to tired nerves and wearied bodies.

After sailing about seven hundred nautical miles in a southeasterly direction from New York —a voyage consuming forty-eight hours—we were able to see in the distance the rough outline of the Bermuda Islands, as their rugged hills and valleys and deep indentured shore-lines came into view. The last four or five hours of the journey was through the Gulf Stream, which entirely surrounds the islands. A distinct change in the temperature could be noticed as soon as we entered the Gulf Stream. Overcoats were very comfortable when we left New York, but palm beach suits were more comfortable than overcoats when we neared Bermuda.

The steamship anchored out about half a mile from the harbor, and a tender came out to take the passengers who were to stop at St. George's. St. George is one of the largest islands, and the town, St. George, is the oldest town, dating back to 1612. We took the St. George steamship secured passage to St. George, and stopped at the St. George Hotel. About half the passengers landed at St. George, and the other half went to Hamilton, a more modern city. We chose St. George because of the quaintness and quietness of the city, and because the St. George Hotel was recommended to us so highly by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Morris, who visited the islands a few years ago. The views from the hotel were magnificent, and the appointments and service were unexcelled.

The Bermuda Islands were first discovered in 1511 by a Spaniard named Juan de Bermudez. These interesting semi-tropical islands are of coral formation and are 365 in number. The natives say, "One for each day in the year." But some of these are very small—only a single family living on an entire island, and some of them so small that they support no animal life at all. The mainland is composed of five principal islands—St. George, St. David, Somerset, and Ireland—with an area of about twenty square miles, a length of twenty-five miles, the islands being connected by bridges and causeways. The islands have about a hundred miles of picturesque roads of coral formation, affording most delightful drives and opportunity for cycling.

One of the things that impressed me on my first day of sightseeing was the negative features of the island. There are no fresh-water streams on the islands, no springs, no wells. Rain water is used exclusively. The homes are built of stone roofs so constructed as to run all the water falling on the roof into a large cistern which filters the water and keeps it cool. Each home has its cistern. It is claimed that the rain water from these cisterns is unusually healthful.

There are no trolley cars, no steam trains, and no automobiles on the islands. About twenty years ago, automobiles were in use on the principal islands, but a careless driver ran over a little boy one day, and the people expressed their indignation by voting every automobile off the islands.

There is an agitation at the present time seeking to secure permission to have automobiles on the islands again, and the question will soon be put to the vote of the people. The natives are opposed to having them, and it would seem that they are right, as the roads are so narrow and the curves are often so short, that autoing would be extremely dangerous. Moreover, the entrancing interest of the islands lies in their quaintness, in the quietness, and peacefulness of a calm, easy-going life—no rush, no hurry. Children play in the streets, people walk along the roads, and nobody has reason for fear from motor cars. The fact of this quietness and perfect safety is what makes the islands so inviting to tourists. Then, too, if automobiles were to be used on the islands, tourists could see all the places of interest in so much shorter time that the many hotels would lose in trade. Also hundreds of the natives who make their living as coachmen would be put out of employment. One of the most enjoyable and restful experience in a visit to Bermuda is that of riding in a Victoria carriage along the beautiful, winding coral and limestone roads that are as white as bleached linen. The crack of the coachman's whip, the clatter of the horse's hoofs upon the hard coral roads calls to mind the stories read in youth of the days of long ago.

The islands have many of the most beautiful drives I have ever seen in my travels through the thirty-five States of the Union visited, five countries of Europe and several of the provinces of Canada. The roads are often cut through the coral rock, leaving high, smooth walls twenty to thirty feet high on either side, with beautiful, flowing vines, and bushes shooting out from the crevices. The woods wind in and out among rolling hills covered with cedar groves and often bordered for miles with hedges of wild oleanders ten to twenty feet high, with their solid mass of pink and white blossoms. And then for long stretches the roads will be bordered with high hedges of flaming scarlet hibiscus. Beautiful, stately palms, feathery bamboos, and other tropical trees add beauty to the drives. Numerous birds, singing from the roadside foliage, add to the pleasure one enjoys as he drives quietly along without being disturbed by the honking of a single automobile.

These hard coral and limestone roads offer great pleasure for the cyclists, of whom there are many. Hundreds of men and women riding bicycles are seen on nearly every drive one takes. A group of us, on a cycling party one afternoon, found it very amusing to try to accustom ourselves to turn to the left when meeting vehicles, according to the British custom which prevails upon the islands, as they belong to Great Britain.

There are numerous famous large crystal caverns reaching far back under the hills and having most wonderful specimens of stalactites and stalagmites which glisten with perfectly wondrous beauty in the light made from strings of electric bulbs. The crystal formations found in some of the larger caves of the island are said not to be surpassed any place in the world. Annet Kellerman chose one of these large caverns, "The Crystal Cave," that has a long stretch of deep silver-blue water winding back among huge stalactites, for her diving and swimming stunts shown in the famous motion picture, "The Daughter of Neptune." This cave, though much smaller, reminds one of the Blue Grottoes in the Island of Capri.

Another interesting attraction found in Bermuda are the wonderful sea gardens out in the harbors where the wonders of the sea life can be viewed most distinctly through a glass-bottomed boat. To a depth of twenty to thirty feet, one can see, as clearly as through the atmosphere, the thousands of beautiful plants, flowers, corals, sponges, and other submarine growths that display through the blue crystaline water the most gorgeous colors of red, yellow and lavender. And at the same time, literally thousands of rainbow-tinted fish, beautiful blue angel fish, sergeant-majors with their stripes of rare colors, and numerous other species swim gracefully and peacefully back and forth among the marine vegetation under the glass-bottomed boat, seemingly oblivious of the fact that scores of human eyes are eagerly watching their play.

The islands are noted for their wonderful flowers for every season of the year. Some of the varieties bloom the year around. The oleander, the hibiscus, and the bourgenvillea were in full bloom at the time of our visit. The Easter lily fields were just being planted while we were there. It was interesting to see that many of the kinds of shrubbery that we have in our yards grow wild in Bermuda, and instead of being low shrubs there, are like trees fifteen to thirty feet high.

Bananas are the principal fruit of the islands. There are a few oranges, lemons, avocada pears and pappaws in the gardens of some of the country homes. And there are a few other most delicious tropical fruits peculiar to the islands that

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Subject: "The Closing Period of Christ's Ministry."

Golden Text: "Blessed is the King that cometh in the name of the Lord."—Luke 19:28.

Devotional Reading: Psa. 118:21-29.

Reference Material: Matt. 21:1-16; Mark 11:1-11; John 12:12-20.

Home Readings: Mon., Christ's triumphant entry—Luke 19:29-40. Tues., The King of glory—Psa. 24:1-10. Wed., Children of the King—Matt. 18:1-6. Thurs., The children praise—Matt. 21:12-17. Fri., The prophecy—Zech. 9:9-13. Sat., The new city—Rev. 21:1-7. Sun., In the name of the Lord—Psa. 118-21-29.

Jesus was on his way from Jericho up to the Passover. Nearing Jerusalem, the disciples felt they were on the eve of great events. They thought to make Him King.

Many of the Jews, now knowing that Jesus was at Bethany, go to see him, and also Lazarus, whom he had raised from the dead. And the chief priests consulted how they might put Lazarus to death, since through him the people believed on Jesus.

In the morning of the first day of the week, many of the people who had come to the feast, hearing that Jesus was coming to Jerusalem, took branches of the palm trees and went forth to meet Him, and cried, "Hosanna, blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord, even the King of Israel." And when Jesus had come to the Mount of Olives He sent two of His disciples, saying, "Go into the village which is near you, and you shall find there a colt tied, on which no man ever rode; loose him and bring him to me." As they were loosing him, the owners asked, "Why loose you the cold?" They said, "The Lord has need of him." They brought him to Jesus, and the disciples put their garments on the cold, and Jesus sat thereon.

As He rode toward the city, great multitudes spread their garments in the way, and others strewed branches cut from the trees. They rejoiced and praised God.

The supreme question is, "How can religion be taught to boys and girls?" Recognizing that the result to be coveted is a way of living rather than an ability to recite certain information, we should direct the study for the development of honesty, courage and good will to all mankind; to open the way for Jesus to reign in our hearts.

As Jesus came near the city, He looked on it and wept when He thought of the sufferings that were coming upon the Jews. Their enemies, He said would encamp against the city, and besiege it and destroy it; every house would be thrown down, so that not one stone would be left upon another: because the Jews, though He came to save them, would not believe Him and were now going to put Him to death.

"Jesus was a hero, because He could not have done what He did if He had not been. It took a stout heart to stand for a cause which He knew He must lose His life for in the end. He must be brave, or He would not have gone to Jerusalem in the face of certain death. He never quavered before an enemy, but stood for His cause until death should hinder Him."

Topic: "The Old Year and the New."

Text: Psa. 37:1-5; Phil. 3:12-14.

It is our duty to forget—that is to say, we are not to let the thorn of past experiences stick and fester in the mind. Look away from the evil of men to the goodness of God. Recall the mercies of God and not men's failures. The past should reveal to us that we are still in the making, and far from perfect, and should spur us to new endeavors. Jesus has arrested or apprehended us for a regnant purpose which the new year will help us realize if we seek His help and strength. Old things may either be anchors or stepping-stones. They may hold us back or spur us on. It depends on how we use them. There is a magnet-quality to the new—it appeals to our curiosity and challenges our spirit of adventure.

If we are bound to recall the mistakes of the old year, let us profit by the memory. We know wherein we have failed and are prepared to avoid the same pitfalls. Let us learn the reason why we failed and avoid repetition. The old year is like a teacher who has written his lessons on the tablet of the mind. We learn by studying the items. The new year is a new teacher, opening fresh fields for investigation and analysis. It carries us further. The old year is not dead. It is the archives. Good for reference. Its influence lives because in this world nothing is lost.

As the apprentice gains in efficiency, so do the years make us better and better unless we are stupidly refusing to heed experience. We stand on the borderland of the "Land of Beginning Again." Every day is the beginning of a new year—the first day of the three hundred and sixty-five.

FACING A GREAT COMMON TASK.

During recent years there has been a manifest tendency on the part of denominational and interdenominational agencies to work co-operatively in the field of religious education. In keeping with this movement, the executive committees of the Interdenominational Young People's Commission and the Professional Young People's Work Section of the International Council of Religious Education met in joint session in Cleveland on December 8, 1924.

These two organizations are composed of workers with young people, and these workers represented international and State councils education, denominations, denominational young people's organizations, such as Epworth League, Baptist Young People's Union, Luther League, etc., and the United Society of Christian Endeavor.

Although these executive committees represented officially their respective organizations, the combined group possessed no legislative or administrative power. All actions were advisory only, and the suggestions made were referred to the executive committees for whatever action might be deemed best.

This joint meeting was characterized by the common purpose to serve young people, that the cause of Jesus Christ might be advanced. Differences in statement of principles, in type of organization and in content of program were discussed with complete openness of mind and with a willingness to understand the viewpoint of others.

The hope was expressed that it might be possible to have a statement of general principles which might be accepted as an outline of policy for all the organizations working for young people in the field of religious education. There were varied opinions regarding the best type of organization, but there was unanimity regarding the value of a complehensive Church program for young people.

To what extent this gathering may be considered a contribution to the cause of religious education remains to be seen. Undoubtedly there is warrant for similar conferences in the future. It was recommended that this type of co-operation be continued by having the two executive committees meet in another joint session, possibly during the latter part of 1925.

It is also hoped that the entire group represented by these executive committees will come together for discussion of their common problems and for a uniting of their forces in the accomplishment of their common task.

THE GLOWING HEART.

I wish my heart were like a glowing candle set kindly in the window of a home, so that its light might shine across the darkness and paint a path for lonely folk who roam. I wish my heart were like a splendid challenge to shadows of dispair and fear and doubt, and that it might fill any room with splendor and keep the wistfulness and dimness out!

I wish my heart were like a pretty candle set in the middle of a table spread with damask and with shining, lovely silver—with milk and butter and with country bread. I wish that happy people might surround me and that when some fine voice was saying grace I might see something of my light reflected—a gleam of joy on every down-bent face.

I wish my heart were like a candle beaming along the surface of a silken fold of drapery that lay, like a soft blessing, on rich mahogany—subdued and old. I wish my light might show a deal of beauty, of copper things and pictures rich and rare; and that it might rest like a mother's fingers across the tendrils of some small child's hair. I wish my light might touch the leaves of roses that smiled, with crimson fragrance, from a bowl of ancient pewter—and I wish the glowing might find its answer in some seeking soul!

I wish my heart were like a candle gleaming upon the branch of a tall Christmas tree and that the gifts that went to eager people would come from other branches close to me. I wish that, just because my light were shining, the Christmas tree made gay with tinsel, could remember that the stars once laughed above it—when it was growing in some silent wood!—Christian Herald.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

Dr. Atkinson will preach at Mt. Auburn the second Sunday in January, 1925, at 11 A. M. If any of the Churches of my charge desire to have preaching while I am away this winter, they can, of course, make their own arrangements. Rev. Jas. L. Foster, Elon College, has kindly offered to aid, as he has no appointments for the first, third and fourth Sundays.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

This report carries us up to $4,113.10 on our Thanksgiving offering. A long distance from ten thousand!

Our grand total for the year has reached the sum of $21,848.07. It will take $5,151.93 to reach our goal for the year. We are not halfway to our Thanksgiving goal. One denomination in North Carolina sent to its Orphanage two weeks ago more than $5,400 on the Thanksgiving offering for just one week. Last week followed with $34,000. Just think of it, this denomination only has five times as many orphan children in its care as our denomination has, but oh! how they love their fatherless ones, and how they do show that love by their gifts!

Our children are all looking forward to Christmas with much joy in anticipation of what old Santa will bring them. I am wondering if their bright expectations will be realized. We have only had two requests for all their names, and one of them was from up North and one from Virginia. Just one request for a small list of names from one Church in the South!

Dear friends, I fear that in our rush to be happy ourselves we often forget others. These little children here crave as much as your little boy or girl, and I sometimes think, in their lonely and barren lives, they crave it more. All children, whether rich or poor, crave the fond caresses of a loving father and the tender love of a kind mother. What would a little infant care to live for if it was not for the love showered upon it by loving parents. It lives to be loved. Oh! for the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is forever stilled comes to most of us and it especially comes to the homeless, fatherless and motherless children. It is our duty, as a Church, to give of our love and of our means to help supply this vacant place in their lives.

The following have been sent in since our last report: Mrs. H. R. Morrison, Berkley, Va., 2 suits underwear; Ladies' Missionary Society of Franklin Christian Church, 1 box with 45 gowns, 1 kimono, 1 middy suit; Nat and Laura Mae Hillyard, 1 quilt; Ladies of Mt. Auburn Church, 2 sheets, 1 towel, 1 pr. pillow cases, 1 dress; Salisbury Cotton Mills, 257 yds. shirting cloth; Woman's Missionary Society, Lebanon Church, N. C., 1 box canned goods, ginghams, towels, clothes, etc.; Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, Va., 1 bag peanuts; Chapel Hill Church, 1 box; Mrs. G. D. Hunt, Wadley, Ala., 1 quilt, 3 sheets, 4 pillow cases; Catawba Springs, N. C., 1 box useful articles; Woman's Bible Class, Winchester Church, Va., 1 box.

ROBT. E. LEE HONORED IN GREECE.

The largest building at the Near East Relief's orphanage in Syra, Greece, will henceforth be known as the "Robert E. Lee Memorial," in recognition of large contributions made toward its erection by the people of the State of Virginia. The building was dedicated last week with impressive ceremonies.

A memorial tablet in the hallway bears a biography of Lee, written by one of the Armenian orphan boys. It begins:

"In the beautiful State of Virginia, near the home of George Washington, lived one of his dearest friends, General Lee. On January 19, 1807, a sturdy son was born, and named Robert Edward. As a boy, Robert was not lazy, but loved to work for himself. Because he was strong and active and cheerful he was greatly loved by all. He never caused his family sorrow by using bad language."

The remainder of the biography recounts Lee's public career, but these first sentences are interesting as showing the traits which seem most admirable to his young Armenian biographer.

PROFESSION AND PRACTICE.

"As he thinketh in his heart, so is he."—Prov. 23:4-8.

Profession and practice thus become one. See how this works in one's Christian life. Suppose a man has looked into the face of Jesus Christ long enough to be intellectually convinced that He was what He claimed to be—that is, the veritable Son of God, who came into the world to die vicariously for our salvation; and suppose he has fortified that conclusion by the further conclusion that it is right, therefore, to espouse His cause and follow Him; and suppose that his will follows up his conscience with the avowal, "I am a Christian"—what then? He cannot but be consistent, for "as one thinketh in his heart, so is he," and so he must be. It was so with Saul of Tarsus.

I received a letter recently from one of the best Christians I have ever known, in which he said: "Of late, I have developed a great fear of the judgment, as our Lord referred to it in Matt. 7: 21-23." The passage reads thus: "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." But observe that our Lord is here addressing Himself to those who have depended for salvation on works without faith. It is true that "faith without works is dead," but a good work without faith is still-born, thrice dead, plucked up by the roots. No man is saved by a mere profession of faith, nor any more by a faithless profession of works.

TUESDAY.

UNSPOKEN PRAYER.

"Now Hannah, she spake in her heart."—1 Sam. 1:13-17.

One of the great hymn-writers has said, "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed." This singer was surely a graduate from God's school of prayer. He had been in the Holy of Holies of prayer, the place where prayer becomes worship.

The deepest prayer may not be found in human words. It may be rather the keeping open the doors of the soul towards the hills of God to admit the fragrance of His grace; taking down the shutters and opening wide the windows to admit the sunlight of His love; removing the debris of selfishness, of worldly affection and of the carnal life, to admit the waves of life eternal to the parched places of the soul. Some one eager to hear the bedtime devotions of the saintly Edwards, concealed himself at his threshold, only to hear him say: "Lord Jesus, it is the same between me and Thee as it was this morning." He had learned the art of keeping open the doors.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

WEDNESDAY.

THE POWER OF AN HONEST PURPOSE.

"But that on the good ground are they, which in an honest and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience."—Luke 8:11-15.

It is not a difficult matter for a boy or girl, properly brought up, to maintain an unblemished record in the matter of stealing. But what is difficult is to preserve a perfectly honest heart toward all the moral questions of life. For honesty is a virtue resulting not only when a person will not steal, but when a person will not harbor a dishonest thought, motive or purpose. Honesty is not an external action, but an inward power.

The man who is inwardly honest, who has greatly resolved, with God's help, to be morally fine through and through, and who has dedicated his life to the realization of that ideal in his own life and in that of others, possesses a moral power which is truly remarkable. An honest purpose can never be overthrown.

Jesus knew the peril of sowing His seed of abundant life upon sterile, stony ground. He saw that deceitfulness would be certain to destroy the results of His message. "True greatness lies in the consciousness of an honest purpose in life." —Rev. Vincent G. Burns.

Prayer.—May we, O Lord, have the spirit of Him who went about doing good. Make us imitators of Him, following in His steps, even if they lead from the star to the cross. And may we be worthy of the crown at last. Amen.

THURSDAY.

THE CHRISTMAS SURPRISE.

"God chose the weak things of the world, that He might put to shame the things that are strong." —1 Cor. 1:23-30.

The Bible is full of surprises that have happened to men. Some are surprises of justice, and some of love. The cradle at Bethlehem was a great surprise to the shepherds, to the Eastern scholars, and to Herod. Wise men never associated a great King with the child of a peasant woman. Greatness is not necessarily strength, nor ponderability power; else lead would be the most powerful of metals.

Wise men went to the palace to find a king, and lo! they found Him in a stable. Two of the greatest personalities that ever came tot his world were found in lowly cradles—Moses and Jesus.

The Bethlehem cradle is greater than Bethlehem steel. God chooses the insignificant things through which to work.

Prayer.—"Sing, O heavens, and rejoice, O earth!" in the birth of the Redeemer, who taketh away the sins of the world. And receive our adoration, even as that of the shepherds that first Christmas Day, as we thank Thee, Most High, for this divine life. Amen.

FRIDAY.

THE EASY YOKE.

"My yoke is easy."—Matt. 11:28-30.

Jesus was a carpenter. Perhape the commonest objects made by carpenters of that day were yokes. A yoke distributes the burden, and so eases it. Another name for comrade is yoke-fellow. Taking upon oneself the yoke is a symbol of the assumption of the responsibilities of discipleship.

There are burdens we all have to bear as citizens oft his world and as citizens of the kingdom of God. We may try to bear them alone, or we may avail ourselves of God's offer to take us into partnership with Himself, in which case we find our selves yoked up with Christ, and the heavy end of the yoke rests upon Him!

Look at the three great duties of the Christian, the duties that "shine aloft like stars"—love, self-denial, and labor. Considered in itself, each of these may be difficult, but compared with their opposites, each is easy. Love is easier to exercise than hate. Self-denial has a sweetness that satiety never knew, and labor is rest, whereas its opposite is rust. And rust is death!

Prayer.—All our hope is in Thee, O Thou who art Immanuel, Christ-Child born to live on earth. Be indeed "God with us," that thus may we walk through life's mysteries rejoicing. Amen.

SATURDAY.

HELP FROM THE UNSEEN.

"The multitude said . . . that it had thundered; others said, an angel hath spoken to him." —John 12:28-31.

There had come the voice of God from heaven. All that stood by heard a noise. But what different conceptions they had of that sound!

As it was then, so is it now. Some can behold a miracle of grace, and yet deny the power of God revealed therein. This fact was demonstrated in the experience of a man, who, up to his fiftieth year, was the hapless slave of alcohol. Four times he took a so-called "cure." After a short season of sobriety, the old evil mastered him again. Driven to desperation, he joined a group of relatives and friends in a circle of prayer. So desperate was he that often he remained all night through in petition. One night, while a friend was joining him in prayer, there came the power of God, as it has in thousands of cases. "I am free!" said the man—and so it proved.

Prayer.—Lord's Prayer, all the circle joining.

SUNDAY.

THE CHRISTMAS GIFT.

"Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger."—Luke 2:12.

Christmas is a divine appeal. The birth of Christ was announced by angels, and it was celebrated by an angel's choir. Their message is above and beyond all human messages. There are human prophecies, and there are divine; but all are made real by the divine element in them. Whatever comes from heaven is authentic, and will surely be fulfilled. More real to us than the things we see, is our confidence that some sweet day the peace of heaven will pervade the earth, and that hatred and strife and bloodshed will give place everywhere to good will among men.

Christmas is an appeal to childhood. It is intended to teach us that the little child is forever in our midst. Our Heavenly Father is making His appeal to selfish and sinful men and women, at the Christmastide, by the Christ-Child, "lying in a manger."

There is only one reason for Christmas—the fact that a Child was born that day, by whom all the nations of the world were to be blessed. The giving of gifts, and the holy holiday wit hits glad greetings, are so many little glad gestures on the part of men to one another, that it is a day beyond all others dedicated as a gift day. It is the Gift that matters! Trees, glittering toys, holly and beribboned packages, Christmas dinners, visits, merry greetings—what are they all but the "loving our brothers as ourselves," because our whole selves go out to God for His gift of the Bethlehem Child in the manger! There is the supreme joy that nothing can take away.

A CHRISTMAS FANCY.

By Elizabeth Scollard.

When the great sun has gone to rest
Behind the hills that hide the West,
And the lamplight in our living-room
Looks like a yellow flower in bloom,
Then I run over to the door,
Though I can't see much any more
Because the world outside is black;
But, spite of that, I don't come back
Until the lights shine in the sky.
My mother says they're stars, but I Think she is wrong; I'm sure I see
The candles on God's Christmas tree!

Kiddies' Korner

MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT, Editor.

HELLO, DEARS!

Your editor has been home to see her mother. 'Cause—oh, my! something happened to her mother's ear. It just ached and ached!—and do you remember how Peter Rabbit's Ma put a flannel-leaf poultice on Peter's ears when they ached? Well, your editor souldn't get her mother to try that; and don't you know, I believe it would have helped, too. Well, anyway, it all got better—and what do you 'spose we talked about? Christmas presents—and Santa Claus, too! Oh-oo-oo, dear Kiddies, isn't it glorious fun to wake up, and there—all as true as true can be—is your stocking all stuffed out with gifts from Santa! and you are so happy that you just smile all over your dear little faces, and—wonders will never cease!—mother allows you to smear candy, and make all the noise you can—and all because Santa Claus came to see you! And, my! mother wishes she was little 'nuff for Santa to come to see. Gee, whiz! boys, isn't Christmas jolly? Girls, what do you think about all this Christmas fun? Write me a letter during the holidays, and they will be published—yes, sir-ee! please do! Why, Kiddies, I love to hear all you do, and all about the presents, too. Come on; hurry up, now. Tell your editor your Christmas fun—oh, tell everything!

And now, here's a Merry Christmas for you all, and a Happy New Year, and a lot of love for each one, from

Your editor,
MADGE FLEMING MOFFITT.

SANTA CLAUS' HELPERS.

It was Christmas Eve, and Santa Claus' workmen were hurrying back and forth as busy as bees in a hive, for old Santa was always in a rush at this time of the year, no matter how much he might loaf during the remainder. The sleigh stood by the door, and as fast as they could, the workmen loaded in the presents for all the good little girls and boys and some that had not been real good all the time, but had promised to be. But the workmen all looked worried, and every little while they glanced at the sky; and the reindeer, too, seemed to be looking for something—they threw up their heads and pawed the ground in the most uneasy manner.

"I can't see what is to be done," said one of the workmen; "it usually comes before this, and it always comes in time, but here it is almost time for old Santa to start on his rounds, and not a bit of snow is there on the ground."

All the other workmen shook their heads and looked at the sky again, but they did not reply, for just at that moment Santa Claus opened the door of his house and came out with a rush. Into the sleigh he jumped and picked up the reins.

"Now, my pretties!" he cried to his reindeer, "we are off for the Kiddies." The pretty reindeer only jumped and pranced; they did not leap and run as usual, and Santa Claus looked at the ground and knew what was the matter. He had been so busy the last few hours that he had not looked out of the window.

"No snow!" he cried; "whoever heard of such a thing? If there is no snow in other parts of the world it always gets here for me to start on, anyway." The workmen all stood back shawing their heads and looking at Santa wonderingly, but no word did they speak.

"Go to the storks and call every one of them in the land; they will have to help me out this year," said Santa Claus.

"We have tried to get them," said the workmen, "but the storks are all busy; lots of babies for Christmas this year," they said.

"Just like those storks, they always get in my way going down the chimney," said Santa; "and I don't know of another bird I could trust to carry a pack; they would either eat all in the pack or carry it off to build a nest. There is just one thing left for me to do. You workmen will have to help out. You will have to come along with me this year, for of course the Kiddies will have to have their Christmas, snow or no snow."

"But we do not look like you, Santa," said the workmen; "and the children will not think they have had a real Christmas if you do not take them their gifts."

"Don't you fret about that," said Santa, jumping out of the sleigh and calling the workmen to follow him.

It was not long before the door of Santa Claus' house was opened again, but this time instead of one Santa Claus there came out a dozen or more and each one looked so much like the other that no one could tell them apart. On the back of each Santa was a big pack. Heads of dolls were sticking out, and the legs of rubber boots, sleds, books, drums, footballs and all sorts of things seemed to be on the very point of tumbling off the big pack, but not a thing dropped as the Santas ran down the hill and hurried off into the night.

The sun was just peeping over the edge of the hill when all the Santa Clauses came trooping back; but not until they reached the inside of Santa's house did they remove the white beards and masks that covered their happy faces.

"Did any of the Kiddies suspect you?" asked Santa.

"I don't think so," answered the men; "most of them were asleep."

"One little boy was up where I called," said one workman, "and he wanted to know where my sleigh and reindeer were. I told him I left them on the roof."

"I didn't hear the bells," he said.

"I didn't know what to say, so I just dropped the presents I had and hurried up the chimney," said the workman.

"Ha! ha! you cannot fool those Kiddies," said Santa; "and I expect that by this time all the boys and girls know that I have to have their mothers and fathers to help sometimes, and now they will guess that there is more than one Santa Claus."

"There is only one real Santa Claus," said the workmen; "all the rest of us are helpers, but we looked so much alike that no little boy or girl will be able to tell for sure whether he sees the real Santa Claus or the helper. And, anyway, everything comes from you, Santa, and I am sure the Kiddies will not mind."

"If the stockings and trees are well filled, I am sure they will not," said Santa Claus; "but I hope next year there is snow on the ground—it is so much more like Christmas. I will see Jack Frost and have it arranged."

THE BEGGAR'S CHRISTMAS.

It was Christmas Eve, and old Saul, the beggar had made his way to the corner to ask alms of the passersby. "There will be many out tonight," said old Saul as he seated himself on the cold stone. "They'll be going in to say their prayers this night, if ever at all."

A large Church stood on this corner, where Saul sat by the fence and he could hear the music and see the lights. Old Saul, the beggar, had once had a comfortable home and wife and little girl, but sickness had come to the large city where they lived and taken away the wife and baby girl, and Saul had been left alone. Sickness had come to him too, and when he recovered, his work had been given to another. Then Saul went to work in a room where the air was bad, and not being strong he fell sick again. This time he could not get work anywhere, and he begged a penny here and there to keep from starving. That was how he became a beggar, and after that he never tried to get work. Sometimes he drank to forget, and sometimes when he had the money he drank to keep warm.

Tonight he watched the faces of the people who passed, and as he seldom did, he let his thoughts go back to the happy days when he had a home. One little girl he thought looked like little Eva, and a woman who dropped a few pennies into his outstretched hand he thought had a smile like his Mary.

"Everybody seems to be happy tonight," thought old Saul; "and they are generous, too; they feel the spirit of Christmas. I shall have a dinner tomorrow."

Just then an old woman passed Saul. She was holding a torn shawl about her shoulders to keep out the cold. Saul could see her bare feet through her worn shoes and her back bent under the wind.

The spirit of Christmas had fallen upon Saul, and he reached out and caught her skirt. "Stop a minute, Granny," he said; "where are you going?"

"To the shelter, where I can sleep out of the cold," she replied; "but I may never reach there, this wind is so hard to walk against."

"Take this," said Saul, and he poured into her hand all the coins he had collected. "Now you can ride," he said. "This is Christmas Eve, and I want to make some one happy."

"The Lord bless you," said the old woman, as she took the coin and went on her way.

How warm and happy Saul felt. He thought he was young again, and he seemed to be sitting beside May in their old home; and there was little Eva standing beside him. He felt a touch on his shoulder and heard some one say, "Poor fellow, he has fainted; let us carry him inside."

When Saul opened his eyes again he saw the bright lights and heard sweet singing. Looking down on him he saw the face of an angel. Saul thought it was little Eva, and he asked, "Where is your mother?" "His mind wanders," said some one, and then Saul saw the face of a woman looking at him, and in her arms she carried a baby. "It is May and the little boy that died," he said. The minister was speaking, and Saul heard him say, "Give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." A picture of Christ seemed to look at him from the wall, and Saul answered, "I gave to the old woman all I had. Show me my treasure, Lord."

"Peace on earth, good will toward men" sang the choir, and Saul closed his eyes. His lips moved, and those who stood near heard him say, "I thank the Lord for my treasure," and his face lit up with a last smile. He had found his treasure, as the Book has promised, and his Christmas Day dawned where there is no more sorrow, and neither sickness nor pain.

And the old woman to whom Saul had given his last penny prayed, before she slept that night, that the old man who had helped her should have a Happy Christmas Day.

All o'er this wide, wide world today
The little Christ-child leads the way;
His tender hands in blessings spread
Drop largest on each bending head.

A TRIP TO BERMUDA.

I had never seen or heard of before. Years ago the islands were noted for their fruits, but on account of lack of attention, pests, etc., more than twenty-five species of fruit have become almost extinct within the past fifty years, we were told.

The beaches along the coast are among the best in the world. The fine sand bottom is a great delight to the bathers. The temperature of the water is perfect for bathing, and the water is so clear that we were able to swim out to a depth of ten to twenty feet and see the bottom. The blue tint of the water is very similar to the water of the Mediterranean. The temperature of the water is most delightful for bathing the year around, we were told.

The people of Bermuda are among the most contented people anywhere to be found. There is not a single case of distressing poverty on the island, it is claimed. The people are unusually hospitable and friendly. The whole life of the island makes one feel that one is in a different world. About 65 per cent of the population are colored. The white people are largely English and Spanish. Compulsory education down through the years, together with the fact that the slaves were freed on the islands nearly a hundred years before they were in the States, accounts for the fact that the colored people of Bermuda are practically on a level with the whites intellectually. They occupy the servants' position, for the most part, though a number of them are successful in business. The colored coachmen and servants speak unusually good English, many of them being high school graduates.

The race relations are altogether different from what they are here in the States. The negroes treat the whites as their superiors, but the whites do not look down upon the blacks as being their inferiors. The colored people are as well educated, for the most part, as the whites, and as courteous and polite—always knowing their place and keeping it. It was a surprise to me to find the whites and blacks worshiping together in the same aristocratic St. Peter's Episcopal Church. The rector told me that the colored members were as dependable and devoted as the white members. I also learned that, while the two races worship together in some of the Churches, there are a number of Churches for the colored people exclusively, and other Churches for the whites exclusively.

The people of both races are unusually pleasant and congenial—quiet, sociable and honest. It is declared that there have been only two murders committed on the islands in the past fifty years. Many of the homes in the towns and in the country have no locks on the doors. And the islands boast of having the least crime, and less thievery than any place in the world with a like population. When I asked the coachman if the banana growers were not afraid to leave their orchards unprotected with fences along the road, he smilingly replied that "None of the Bermudans would bother, and that no one but a tourist would steal, bananas."

These beautiful islands give opportunity for perfect rest. The scenery and the people offer such a contrast to what is found anywhere else in the world. The climate is ideal, the ocean breezes refreshing, the sunshine beautiful, and the skies fair. A trip to these interesting islands is abundantly worthwhile. I know of no better place anywhere for one to go for genuine rest and recuperation. As long as we live we shall feel grateful for the kindness of our Church in extending us the courtesy of the trip.

AFTER CONFERENCE, WHAT?

With us, it has been to enter upon a new field of work—a pastorate composed of four Churches and about 800 members, with two preaching services per month for each Church. This is spoken of as the Windsor field, as this is the most central point of the group, composed of Windsor, Antioch, Bethlehem and Isle of Wight Courthouse. This is a great field for work, and offers a challenge for the best that the pastor can give. We have found the people very cordial and responsive, and, together, we are hoping for better things.

We were with the people at Bethlehem and Antioch in a week's meeting at each place in September. This gave us a good opportunity to get acquainted with the people. The Antioch meeting has been reported by former pastor Bradshaw. Thirteen members were received at Bethlehem. We have received one member there since Conference. We have recently received fifteen members into the Windsor Church, twelve of these having made a profession in a meeting held here in October, conducted by Rev. H. S. Hardcastle.

We would like to commend the committee on stewardship, appointed at the last session of Conference, for their efforts in getting this important subject before the Churches, through the pastors, during stewardship months.

Let other standing committees meet early in the year and plan something progressive and something to be emphasized at the next Conference. Many committees do not meet during the year, and often the chairman will write out something just before Conference, without having consulted the other members of the committee.

WHICH IS THE BEST INVESTMENT?

It is that one best suited to the requirements of the individual purchaser.

For example: What is best for the millionaire, whose income is in the high brackets, and to whom income is no object, is obviously not the best for the investor who must have the maximum income consistent with safety.

TATE.

After several days of suffering, Bro. Tate passed away on November 28th. Bro. Tate became a member of the Rocky Ford Church when it was first formed. While at the time of his departure he was sixty-eight years old, he remarked that as one of the charter members and as one that was willing for God's will to be done, he had longed to see the time when they would have a building at Rocky Ford. He seemed to have been perfectly content to pass.

The writer has at times, as others, become discouraged in the progress of his work. Yet who could regret one hour of service or one cent of money when they stand by the bedside and hear such testimonies coming from people who have so readily responded to the call from God as soon as they have had it explained.

He was buried on Sunday, November 30th, near his home at the home burying ground. The funeral service was conducted at the grave by the writer.

BARBER.

David Riley Barber departed this life November 21, 1924, at the age of 74 years, 7 months, 24 days. He was first married to Miss Mary A. E. Michael, September 6, 1874. To this union were born eight children, as follows: L. T. Barber, Gibsonville, N. C.; P. F. Barber, Helena, Miss.; Fred H., Arley E., and Wm. C. Barber, of Owanka, S. D.; Mrs. T. N. Adams, Raleigh, N. C.; B. A. Barber, Elon College, N. C., and Herbert H. Barber, who gave his life in the great World War. After the death of his first wife, he was married to Miss Addie Thomas, who still survives. To this union three children were born, all of whom survive, namely: Dewit, Odessa and Dan, all of Elon College, N. C.

Bro. Barber made a profession of faith at about the age of twenty-three and connected himself with the Church at Bethlehem, later moving his membership to Shallow Ford, where he remained loyal and faithful to the end, having been a deacon for many years. A good man has gone to his reward, and may the good Lord comfort the hearts of his loved ones.
